Quick Veto Is Predicted As Tax Cut Clears House

Vote Is 220 to 99; Senate May Send Bill to President Before Nightfall

By Robert C. Albright
Post Reporter

Democratic leaders last night speculated on a quick veto of the four-billion-dollar tax reduction bill as the House finally approved the measure, 220 to 99.

Final Senate action is slated today and the bill may reach the White House before nightfall.

One usually well-informed Administration source said the President already has made up his mind on the measure, and a veto may reach Congress within the week.

Knutson Bets Against Veto

House Ways and Means Chairman Harold Knutson (R., Minn.) told newsmen, however, he is just as convinced the President will let it become law.

"I've already bet a new hat he will either sign it, or let it become law without his signature," said the bill's leading GOP author.

On the final vote, the House ran up a better than two-thirds majority, or more than enough to override a Presidential veto.

The Senate, however, fell short of an overriding majority on its last tax bill test. All indications point to final Senate passage today by less than the required two-thirds.

This One or None

The effect of a veto, and failure of either house to override, would be to knock out any tax reduction this year. Knutson told newsmen it is too late in the session to enact even a "quickie" second measure.

In yesterday's House vote, 37 Democrats joined 183 Republicans in support of the conference-revised measure. Ninety-seven Democrats, one Republican, Representative Merlin Hull of Wisconsin, and one American Laborite, Representative Vito Marcantonio of New York, voted "No."

The vote showed the revised measure had picked up House strength since the vote on the original Knutson bill. That passed the House March 27, 275 to 137, just shy of the needed two-thirds.

July 1 Effective Date

The bill imposes cuts ranging from 30 per cent in the lowest brackets to 10.5 per cent in the highest. These would take effect in full on payroll withholdings July 1. But in computing taxes for the full 1947 calendar year, taxpayers would be allowed only half the cut. In 1948 and thereafter they could take the full 10.5 to 30 per cent slash.

Among Democrats who originally opposed tax reduction at this time, but voted for it yesterday, was Representative Robert L. Doughton (D., N. C.), former Ways and Means chairman. Doughton said a brighter revenue outlook convinced him Congress can cut taxes and still make a substantial payment on the debt. Doughton declined to say whether he would

NMU Polling Members on Ship Strike

Major Maritime Walkout Threatens In CIO Union Action

New York, June 2 (AP).—Possibilities of another major maritime strike arose today with the announcement of the CIO National Maritime Union of a strike poll among its 90,000 members.

The NMU seamen were asked to ballot on whether they would walk out in support of new contract demands or to support other unions which the NMU said might be locked out by shipowners.

The latest issue of the NMU paper, The Pilot, announced the referendum and urged, "Vote Yes," in three-inch letters on its cover. The voting will continue until June 22.

The union said its new demands might include wage and overtime increases, the 40-hour week at sea, extended vacations, increased manning scales, health and welfare funds and improvement in working rules and living conditions. Present monthly pay for able seamen is $182.85.

The groups which the NMU said might be locked out June 15 are two West Coast CIO unions—the Marine Cooks and Stewards and the International Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union.

Joseph Curran, NMU president, said no exceptions would be permitted in the event of a strike this year. Union seamen were allowed to sail on vessels carrying food and other relief supplies abroad during the tieups last year.

Pittsburgh, June 2 (AP).—Motor freight transportation in the Pittsburgh district was crippled today by a strike of 2300 AFL drivers demanding higher wages.

Approximately 1800 trucks engaged in interstate, intercity and intracity freight hauling were tied up. Shipments from railroad warehouses and truck terminals, as well as those going over the road, were halted.

Free Until Fall

Court Turns Down Appeal By Curley

The Supreme Court yesterday refused to hear former Congressman James M. Curley's appeal from his 6-to-18-month jail sentence for a war contract swindle.

Curley—who is now Mayor of Boston—took the news calmly and said he would leave everything to his Washington lawyers, William E. Leahy and Nicholas J. Chase. They have 25 days to ask the court for a rehearing. This by itself probably will keep Curley out of jail until fall, as the rehearing would take several days to settle and by then the justices will have adjourned for the summer.

Justice Murphy was in favor of hearing the Curley appeal.

Turn Down Smith

The court turned down, too, the appeal of Donald Wakefield Smith, a former member of the National Labor Relations Board. Smith was convicted with Curley and sentenced to 4 to 12 months in jail.

The third man in the case, James G. Fuller, did not appeal his sentence of 16 months to four years. Prosecutor William A. Paisley—who now is trying the May-Garsson bribe-conspiracy case — accused Curley, Smith and Fuller of making about $60,000 by giving false promises that they would get war contracts for customers.

A new test of the religious liberty clause of the first amendment was assured yesterday, when the justices agreed to pass upon religious teaching in Illinois public school buildings.

Religious classes were set up in the Champaign, Ill., schools on a voluntary basis. The local Council of Religious Education—which includes Jews, Protestant and Roman Catholic members—handled the classes and paid the teachers. Mrs. Vashti McCollum, 33-year-old mother of three boys, who says she is a "rationalist or atheist," objected. She claimed the arrangement was a union of church and state forbidden by both the State and Federal constitutions. The Illinois Supreme Court

Landis Doubts 'Negligence' In Air Crashes

Finds No Evidence' Of CAB, CAA Violations In N. Y., Md. Crackups

Chairman James M. Landis of the Civil Aeronautics Board yesterday reported tentative conclusions on the causes of the Nation's two most recent and most serious airline crashes.

It is "pretty definitely established," Landis said, that a sudden shift of the wind, while the aircraft was taking off, caused the crash of the United Airlines DC-4 on Thursday at LaGuardia Field. Forty-two persons were killed.

Landis was less certain about the cause of the crash of an Eastern Air Lines DC-4 on Friday near Port Deposit, Md., in which 53 persons lost their lives. He indicated that the "most immediately obvious possibility" was structural failure, probably in the tail assembly.

He emphasized that the assessments were still tentative, particularly in the last disaster, and might be changed by further investigations now in progress. These might require months to complete, he said.

But he declared flatly that there was no indication of a violation of CAB rules or regulations in either crash. Further, in reply to congressional charges of "gross negligence" by the CAB and the Civil Aeronautics Administration, Landis said he had seen no evidence of such negligence. If there was any, he added, he would like to hear about it.

The charge had been made yes-

Senate Votes 'Voluntary' Rent Boosts

Tenants' Group, Led by LaGuardia, Fails in Effort To Kill Increase

By Mary Spargo
Post Reporter

By a voice vote yesterday the Senate passed a bill extending rent controls but providing for a 15 per cent "voluntary" rent increase.

The bill now goes to a conference between the two houses of Congress, but the Senate 15 per cent "voluntary" increase is similar to one already passed by the House so that the provision will remain in the measure.

A desperate last minute effort by tenants' organizations, led by former Mayor Fiorello LaGuardia of New York, to defeat the boost fell on deaf ears.

Tobey Opposes Bill

Senator Charles W. Tobey (R., N. H.), defied the GOP leadership and thundered out against the bill.

The so-called voluntary boost, he insisted is "actually a pistol at the heads of the little people to come across or else."

The Senate rejected, 58 to 16, a proposal by Senator Glen Taylor (D., Idaho) to continue rent controls until July 1, 1948, without a general increase.

Sponsored by Hawkes

Under the rent hike amendment, sponsored by Senator Albert W. Hawkes (R., N. J.), landlords and tenants would agree "mutually and in good faith" to raise rents 15 per cent over levels in effect September 1, 1946, provided the landlord signs a lease extending beyond December 31, 1948.

LaGuardia, representing the National Fair Rents Committee, buttonholed individual Senators, warning them that the increase was "a blackjack" which would seriously disturb family life in every city in America.

He said that if the Hawkes formula results in average rent increases of $5 a month the national rent bill will go up 90 million dollars a month.

On motion of Senator C. Douglass Buck (R., Del.), floor manager of the bill, the Senate also adopted a House-passed provision forbidding the housing expediter to exercise control over building materials and new housing.

The Senate left the expediter with authority to prevent the use of materials in amusement and recreational building and commercial construction.

Sparkman Leads Fights

Democrats, led by Senator John J. Sparkman (D., Ala.) protested this move, pointing out that the question had not even been discussed in committee.

In effect this strips the housing expediter of all remaining controls, Sparkman insisted.

Senator Ralph Flanders (R., Vt.), who supported the bill, joined in opposing adoption of the House plan to remove building materials from control. Flanders asserted the proposal had not even been considered by the committee handling the bill.

The Senate did a quick back flip on one provision it adopted last week requiring the housing expediter to take rent controls off at least 5 per cent of the total number of defense rent-control areas each month.

The original amendment was introduced by Senator Joseph R. McCarthy (R., Wis.), and was reversed on motion of Senator J. W. Fulbright (D., Ark.). There are more than 600 such areas now under Federal control, and under the McCarthy amendment the lid would have been lifted in 30 areas each month.

Red Cabinet Takes Over

Varga, No. 2 Man to Nagy, Flees Hungary and Arrest

By Jack Guinn

Budapest, June 2 (AP).—Bela Varga, the Catholic priest who was speaker of the House and No. 2 man in the ousted government of Ferenc Nagy, has fled Hungary in order to escape arrest by the Communists, a reliable informant said today. He was believed to have taken refuge in the United States zone in Austria.

The informant, a close friend of Varga, said that shortly before last midnight Varga was driven to Sopron, near the Austrian border in northwestern Hungary. There he planned to dash across the Soviet zone to safety in the American sector.

"I know he was met by a reliable guide with a fast car and I presume he safely got across," the informant added.

There was no confirmation here that he did.

Dinnyes Calls Cabinet

The informant said Varga had been advised by friends that plans were already made for his arrest on charges of being implicated in the recent alleged plot to overthrow the government.

Meanwhile the new pro-Communist premier, Lajos Dinnyes, held a short cabinet meeting today to get his new regime rolling. He promised he would "ardently work for reconstruction" and support the Communist "three-year plan" for economic recovery, patterned after Russia's five-year plan.

He announced that the Hungarian Parliament, in which the Small Holders Party of Nagy and Varga held a majority would convene under the Communist-dominated regime for the first time June 10.

Varga said in an interview Saturday that Dinnyes, left wing Small Holder who was minister of war under Nagy, had been named premier on direct orders of Soviet Lieut. Gen. V. P. Sviridov, acting chairman of the Allied Control Commission in Hungary.

The appointment was confirmed at a parliamentary political committee over which Varga said he presided against his will.

"I know that I will be arrested," Varga said Saturday. "What should I do? Would I gain more by running away and trying to work for my country from the outside or should I stay and become a martyr?"

He decided on flight.

Exile Government?

(A dispatch from Buchs, Switzerland, said that Nagy, his wife and their daughter held a tearful reunion with his 4-year-old son, Ladislaw (Lacl) Nagy, after the boy arrived at the Swiss side of the Austrian frontier accompanied by a Hungarian official and a nurse.

Plan to Divide India Reported Agreed Upon

Details of British Compromise Will Be Made Public Today

New Delhi, India, June 2 (AP).—Leaders of the Moslem League and the predominantly Hindu Congress Party were reported reliably tonight to have accepted a secret British compromise plan, presented to them earlier in the day, calling for a partitioning of India.

Details of the British proposal, handed to seven Indian leaders at a momentous conference with Viceroy Lord Mountbatten, will be made public tomorrow. This indicated that the major Indian parties either had accepted it or would do so by tomorrow.

(British government sources in London said simultaneous statements outlining the plan would be made in both branches of Britain's parliament at approximately 8:30 a. m. EST Tuesday.)

Reliable informants said that the plan, under which Britain would surrender her powers and withdraw from India within the next 12 months, provided for the creation of an independent state of Pakistan, as demanded by the Moslem League.

However, India would be divided in such a way that Sikh and Hindu minorities in the predominantly Moslem provinces of Bengal and the Punjab would not be included in the Pakistan area.

This represented a compromise between the Congress Party, which wanted a United India, and the Moslem League, which wanted all

U. S., Britain Set Up German Economic Unit

Rehabilitation System Left Open for Soviet And France to Join

Berlin, June 2 (AP).—The Americans and British proclaimed officially today in their economically merged zones the creation of a central agency empowered to pass legislation designed to speed the economic rehabilitation of 40 million Germans.

The proclamation gave the Germans in these zones the greatest measure of self-administration they have yet received under the occupation.

The agency, called the Economic Council, together with an executive committee and executive directors for coordinating its work, was announced jointly by Gen. Lucius D. Clay and Lieut. Gen. Sir Brian Robertson to the Germans in the eight states of the combined zones.

Its objective was to put the economy of the two zones on a "going basis, and thus ease the burden for British and American taxpayers."

Penalties Set Out

Meanwhile British-American officials announced an ordinance governing production, allocation and distribution of goods and raw materials, and setting up heavy penalties in fines and imprisonment for violations.

The proclamations on the new economic council, which will take effect on June 10, gave it power to direct economic reconstruction in the combined zones within the level of industry permitted the Germans now or in the future.

All of its functions, however, will be controlled by the British-American military governments.

The way was left open for the Russians and French to join in economic unification of the Reich.

Embodies Wide Program

The proclamations empowered the Economic Council, in effect a legislature:

1. To direct economic reconstruction in the combined zones within the level of industry allowed the Germans now or in the future.

2. To adopt and promulgate ordinances on transport both by rail and by water, on communications, inter-land waterways and highways, production, allocation and distribution of goods, raw materials, gas, water and electricity; foreign and internal trade; price formation and control; production, importation, collection and distri-

U. S. Cuts Off Credit of Red Regime In Hungary

Action Emphasized By Offers of Aid To Non-Communist Rules in Italy, Iran

By Ferdinand Kuhn, Jr.
Post Reporter

The United States yesterday showed its displeasure with the new Communist regime in Hungary by cancelling the remaining 15 million dollars of Hungary's credit for surplus American property in Europe.

At the same time the United States sought to encourage non-Communist governments by:

(1) Announcing its intention to give Iran a surplus property credit of 30 million dollars for equipping its armed forces, and

(2) Welcoming the formation of an entirely non-Communist government in Italy, and again promising economic help to the Italian people.

Gold Recently Returned

The suspension of the Hungarian credit was about all the United States could do, short of verbal protests, against the virtual seizure of power by the Communists in Budapest.

Hungarian gold worth 32 million dollars had already been returned from the American zone in Germany, some of it with much public ceremony, to show American friendliness toward the government of anti-Communist Premier Ferenc Nagy. The new Communist regime will have full use of this gold supply.

The United States had also granted an Export-Import Bank credit of seven million dollars, largely for cotton purchases, and had included Hungary among the recipients of the 350-million dollars in relief money just voted by Congress.

Before the new Hungarian regime can qualify for this money, it must sign an agreement that American inspectors can supervise its distribution. The amount to be allocated to Hungary has not yet been determined.

Even if the remainder surplus property credit has been suspended, it is doubtful whether Hungary would have had the full use of it. The amount of American surplus property in central Europe has been dwindling fast, and it is by no means certain that the Hungarians would have been able to buy up to the full 30 million dollars worth of property allowed them.

Statement by Marshall

Yesterday's suspension was announced in the following statement by Secretary Marshall:

"The United States Government is considering the situation which has arisen in Hungary. Pending clarification of developments there it has been decided to suspend further execution of the surplus property agreement concluded with Hungary. It is understood that of the total credits authorized for Hungary by the Surplus Property Administration, amounting to 30 million dollars, over 15 million dollars has not been utilized."

There is little doubt that a formal protest will follow, addressed not only to Budapest but to Moscow as well. This was the tactic followed at the time of last winter's election in Poland, regarded here as a violation of the Yalta agreement which Soviet Russia signed.

The protest over Poland was

Senate Bill Raises Treasury, Postal Appropriations

The Senate yesterday passed a bulk appropriation bill carrying $3,243,045,173 to operate the Treasury and Postoffice departments during the next fiscal year. Action came on a voice vote.

The measure carries $40,994,423 more than voted by the House and now must go to a Senate-House conference committee to adjust differences.

Biggest Senate increase was twenty-five million dollars additional for the tax collecting Bureau of Internal Revenue. The House voted 178 million dollars but the Senate upped this to 203 million dollars after Treasury officials said each dollar spent on tax collections would return $20 to the Government.

Missing Books Turn Up

Henry Garsson Backed May To 'Get Lumber,' He Testifies

By Dillard Stokes
Post Reporter

Dr. Henry M. Garsson yesterday swore that he set A. J. May up in the lumber business to get lumber—and not to buy May's influence as House Military chairman.

Dr. Garsson backed up his story with the missing stock and minute books of Cumberland Lumber Co.—which the Government claims was a blind to cover up bribes paid to May.

The FBI looked for these books in vain for more than a year, and last fall Dr. Garsson told a Washington grand jury that he had no idea where they were. Yesterday he claimed he found them among his things in Evanston, Ill., just a few days before he went on trial in the District Court for bribery and conspiracy. His brother, Murray Garsson, and May himself, are on trial, too.

Prosecutor William A. Paisley and his staff took charge of the Cumberland books when the court day ended.

Dr. Garsson began his second day on the stand with an account of his training in law and engineering, topped off by a doctorate in philosophy from Columbia University. Early in the war, he said, he became active in Erie Basin and Batavia Metal Products, two of the companies which got more than 78 million dollars in war orders during the time May was acting as the Garsson pressure man at the War Department.

Dr. Garsson said this war business was not built on May's influence, and that as matter of fact he had more than 10 million dollars in orders before he ever met

Just a Yankee Trick

Lincoln Caused South to Open Civil War, Historian Asserts

By Walter T. Pulliam
Post Reporter

Abraham Lincoln was charged yesterday with "tricking" the South into starting the Civil War.

That allegation echoed through hallways of the United States Capitol yesterday as nearly 100 loyal children of the Confederacy gathered to pay homage to Jefferson Davis.

The speaker was Dr. Charles C. Tansill, a Georgetown University history professor.

He accused the Great Emancipator, in language reminiscent of "Johnny Reb" of "dubious intrigue" before the 1861 opening gunfire at Fort Sumter.

"The responsibility for the Civil War," he declared, "rests securely upon only one pair of shoulders—and those shoulders belonged to Abraham Lincoln."

Of Fort Sumter, he charged Lincoln "played fast and loose" with Southerners "in order to trick them into a bombardment of the famous fort" and make them appear "the aggressors."

Tansill was principal speaker at a wreath-laying at a statue of Jefferson Davis in the Capitol's Statuary Hall. The service was part of a three-day observance of the Confederate President's 139th birthday anniversary.

The United Daughters of the Confederacy, Children of the Confederacy and the Sons of Confederate Veterans took part in the service, but the commander-in-chief of the last-mentionad organization, Fred P. Myers, disavowed Tansill's speech as representing the sentiments of the SCV.

"I think he went too far," Myers said. "I don't think he should have made such an attack on Lincoln. Several others present expressed concern over it."

Mrs. John M. Wilcox, president-general of the UDC, also disavowed the speech.

"His allusions to Mr. Lincoln," she said, "do not reflect our views. We think it rather untimely that those remarks were made. We don't care to start up a controversy."

Lincoln's election in 1860, Tansill charged, killed the Federal Union Washington, Jefferson and Jackson had worked for, and he added the President-elect "did not have the decency to give it a polite burial."

He charged Lincoln did nothing following his 1860 election "to quiet the growing friction that pointed to war" between the States, and he said that as the 1860 crisis

Peace or War?

World's Fate May Be Decided During 1947, Pope Declares

Vatican City, June 2 (AP).—Pope Pius XII warned the major powers of the world today that the remaining months of 1947—a year that "future generations will either bless or curse"—might be their "last opportunity" to chart an enduring peace.

In his hardest-hitting speech in years, the Pontiff declared that the world had failed humiliatingly thus far in 1947 to solve its war-born problems.

"The wounds caused by the war have not yet been healed," the slender, 71-year-old Pope said. "Indeed, some of them have rather been deepened and inflamed."

The Pontiff asserted that the verdict of history would hinge on "events and discussions" during the balance of the year, and urged "rulers of the states not to let slip this opportunity."

"It may be—God forbid—the last opportunity," he added.

The Pope delivered his 30-minute address, which was broadcast by the Vatican radio, from his red-and-gold private library on the occasion of his saint's day, St. Eugene. Seventeen members of the College of Cardinals were present.

Immediately prior to the talk, he received the customary felicitations of the princes of the Church from their gnarled, 96-year-old dean, Gennaro Cardinal Granito Pignatelli de Belmonte.

In an apparent reference to the failure of the major powers to conclude a peace, the Pope declared:

"In seeing fruitless conferences succeeding one another and the series of interrupted or postponed discussions being prolonged, the peoples, bitterly deluded in their

did not agree with her and she appealed.

Back to Jail

Justice Jackson spoke for the court in ordering John Memolo back to jail. Two years ago Federal Judge William F. Smith gave Memolo three years for tax evasion and turned down his motion for a new trial. The Third Circuit Court of Appeals upheld Judge Smith, the Supreme Court refused to hear an appeal and, no legal loophole remaining for him, Memolo was locked up in Lewisburg Penitentiary on April 8, 1946. The next day word came that Judge Smith had decided to give him a new trial after all. He has been free while the Government appealed from the new-trial order.

Jackson said judges could take all the time they wanted to think over their rulings, but they could not change them after they had been given and upheld by courts of appeal.

Memolo claimed he was brought to trial on the tax charge because he would not testify against former Federal Judge Albert W. Johnson of Lewisburg, Pa. Johnson was cleared last March 24 of charges of conspiracy to obstruct justice and defraud the Government. But Memolo, Jacob Greene and Johnson's sons, Donald M. and Miller A. Johnson, were found guilty, fined $10,000 each and sentenced to two years in prison.

30-Year Sentence Upheld

Beside these rulings, the Supreme Court yesterday:

Ordered Elliott W. Michener to serve the whole 30-year term given him in Duluth, Minn., in 1936. Michener got 15 years for making a counterfeit plate for a $10 bill and another 15 years for having the plate. The Eighth Circuit Court of Appeals had held that both sentences were for the same crime and relieved Michener of one of them.

Ordered Federal Judge Claude McCulloch of Portland, Oreg., to try four men for selling cars above ceiling prices in 1945 and 1946. Judge McCulloch had thrown out the charges because the men had not been allowed to attack the OPA orders which set the ceilings.

Upheld Federal claims to 680 acres of oil land in Pary County, Wyo., and ordered Special Master Nat U. Brown to hold hearings on whether the State and the Ohio Oil Co. must pay the Government for $165,000 worth of oil that has been taken from it; and Refused to hear the appeal of Jerome A. Nevius from a conviction of taking bribes from the Silver Dollar gambling house when he was prosecutor in Clark County, Ohio.

About 40 cases that were argued this year are still to be decided. The court has scheduled two more sessions, next Monday and the Monday after that.

Curley Is Calm

Boston, June 2 (AP).—Mayor James M. Curley received calmly word that the Supreme Court had upheld his conviction on mail fraud charges.

"The matter is entirely in the hands of my attorneys," he told newsmen, "and I will be guided by their judgment."

The 72-year-old mayor, who is serving his fourth term, has indicated that he has no intention of resigning. City counsel have ruled that he could still remain as mayor even if forced to serve the 6 to 18 months sentence.

Should Curley step down, the president of the city council—John B. Kelly—would automatically become acting mayor until an election could be held.

Kelly Under Indictment

Kelly himself is under indictment on charges of soliciting bribes and attempted larceny and goes on trial Thursday in Suffolk Superior Court.

The silver-haired Curley — a power in Democratic politics in Massachusetts for a half century as mayor of Boston, Congressman and Governor—was elected in 1945 to a four-year term as mayor while under indictment.

After his conviction, cheering crowds greeted him upon his return from Washington for one of the largest ovations ever given a public official here.

Once before Curley went to jail. At the outset of his political career, he served two months for impersonating another man in a civil service examination.

From jail he conducted a vigorous campaign for reelection as alderman—and won easily.

Curley capitalized on this incident in his many campaigns afterward—frequently mentioning that he went to jail to help out a needy friend.

In the Senate, former Finance Chairman Walter F. George (D., Ga.) likewise had supported the tax bill. George told newsmen he would vote to sustain a veto, however, if the President found the cuts would endanger the national credit.

During yesterday's House debate, Representatives John Dingell (D., Mich.) and Herman P. Eberharter (D., Pa.) led the attack on the bill. Dingell called the bill "a cruel hoax on the people. . . it favors the rich against the poor."

Representative Albert J. Engle (R., Mich.), after bolting Republican ranks to oppose the original Knutson bill, voted for the conference report. He said the bill represented only a slight improvement over the original but it was this bill or none. He argued increased revenues and "savings" justified a tax cut.

Engle complained nonetheless that 4 per cent of the taxpayers at the top of the income scale will receive 37 per cent of the total reduction. He estimateda middle 43 per cent of the taxpayers will get 36 per cent of the cut. He said that left for the bottom 53 per cent of all taxpayers only 27 per cent of the total reduction.

Knutson told the House the bill spread its benefits "fairly" between all groups, without discrimination.

In a subsequent statement Knutson said revenue receipts are now running 2½ billion dollars in excess of the President's estimates.

"We will be able to hold expenditures down to 33 billion dollars, as against his (Truman's) 37½-billion-dollar budget."

Knutson said that would leave sufficient margin for tax cuts plus "approximately 5.2 billions for debt reduction and unforeseen contingencies."

rent boards throughout the country to get controls back on a "hometown" basis. These boards could recommend area decontrol or area-wide increases. The decision would be final unless reversed within 30 days by the housing expediter.

Chief job of the area rent control boards would be to handle the thousands of individual landlord "hardship relief" cases that have been snowing under the Federal headquarters.

The Senate bill would permit States to set up their own control systems by passing special laws through the legislatures.

60-Day Priority Retained

The Senate bill retained the present 60-day priority for veterans in the purchase of homes and the 30-day priority in the rental of new housing.

On motion of Senator Guy Cordon (R., Oreg.), the Senate provided for the expenditure of 25 million dollars for access roads into Federal timber lands.

The Cordon amendment was bitterly opposed by Senator Harry Cain (R., Wash.) who said he knew all the timber operators in the Northwest.

The timber operators don't want Federal "subsidies," Cain shouted. All that's needed, he said, is for the Federal Government to give permission to cut sufficient timber and the operators will build their own roads better and cheaper.

of Bengal and the Punjab to be embraced in Pakistan.

The British were understood to favor, first, an undivided India, but to have proposed the compromise as an alternative.

Mountbatten placed the plan before the Indian leaders at a two-hour meeting, while police armed with rapid-fire guns patrolled the streets of this tense capital in event of riots.

The Indians emerged smiling but tight-lipped from today's meeting. Shortly thereafter, Mohandas K. Gandhi conferred with Mountbatten. Gandhi has been bitterly opposed to partition.

the 72-year-old Kentuckian he is accused of bribing.

By 1943, Dr. Garsson said, his firms were having trouble getting lumber to crate the shells they made for the Army. They hired scouts and sent them as far as the West Coast to buy lumber, and kept several expediters trying to keep a supply. One of these was Joseph F. Freeman, the Garsson contact man in Washington, who was on trial with May and the Garssons but was cleared by Justice Henry A. Schweinhaut.

Dr. Garsson said Freeman got the name of one lumber company from May, but this prospect failed. Then, he said Freeman reported that May knew where to buy a fine stretch of timberland, and that labor and a mill could be had.

A. B. Gellman, the Erie Basin president, did not want to go in the lumber business, but the company lent the Garssons the money to do so. Dr. Garsson said these loans started the Cumberland company and kept it going for three years, while May was running it for the Garssons—without pay, May claims.

Dr. Garsson said he often was told lumber would soon be on the way, but never got any. In the spring of 1945, he said, he asked May for an accounting of timber cut and of money. What May told him likely will come out when the trial resumes today.

desire for order, peace and reconstruction, are coming to lose hope and patience.

"It is not our intention to make accusations. We have before our eyes a higher purpose than to pass judgment on what has been done. We wish to forestall now any greater evils in the near and distant future."

The pontiff said that he knew well the "unspeakable horrors with which the defeated system covered the face of Europe" and did not wish to minimize "the enormity of its guilt."

Why Same Weapons?

"But how is it possible for the victorious nations, in their turn, to adopt or tolerate the methods of hate and violence on which that system lived and thrived?" he asked. "Or how can they use the weapons which aroused their righteous indignation when employed in the hands of others?

"What sensible man would ever seek a guarantee for his own safety in the ruin and misery of his neighbor? . . .

"Security, as far as it may be realized here below, cannot have any other solid foundation than the physical and moral well-being of a nation, based internally on right and public order and externally on normal relations with neighboring states."

Pope Pius asserted that much was said during the war about a universal prosperity which would result from an Allied victory.

Calls for Production

"But where is it?" he asked. "There are, indeed, countries where the wheels of industry turn rapidly and work without interruption and at a maximum capacity.

"Production, over-production, that is the golden key, the sesame, the secret formula that would wipe out the last traces of the evils of the war and fill up the craters it made.

"But the prosperity of nations cannot be safe and secure if all do not share in it. Hence it is not unlikely that idleness and the impossibility of commerce in which some nations find themselves placed will automatically cause in the near future economic crises and unemployment even in other nations as well."

The Pope said that millions of people were still living "under oppression and despotic rule," while the world waited for justice and law to create stable conditions.

"For them nothing is safe, neither home, nor goods, nor liberty, nor honor," he said. "Thus the last ray of happiness, the last spark of courage dies in their hearts."

The Pontiff asked whether it was not true that the year 1947 had brought, thus far, only a "mighty onrush of problems" and "the humiliating lack of solution of them."

"The verdict of history will be in accordance with the results coming from the events and discussions of the months which still remain," he said. "Future generations will either bless (1947) or curse it. . . .

Defines Christian Mission

Pope Pius said Christians should oppose vacillation and uncertain principles with faith and fearless courage.

The mission of Christians, he continued, is to open the eyes of the peoples so that "those who see matters in the light of the divine order may have no doubt that in the gravest antagonism of human and national interests there is always room for a peaceful settlement."

"This is precisely the explanation of the hatred towards the Church that all those cherish whole life depends on dissentions and conflicts and whose interest it is to fan them continuously into flame," he said.

"They feel almost instinctively that the Church, established by God as a rock of brotherhood and of peace, cannot come to terms with the idolatrous worshippers of brute force and of struggles, inside and outside their frontiers, for world domination."

deepened the "Sphinx of Springfield remained eloquently silent."

He praised Jefferson Davis as an "ideal" for freedom-seeking peoples.

"On January 10, 1861, Jefferson Davis," he declared, "clearly saw the futility of any further moves toward erecting a bridge of understanding between the North and the South.

"Like Horatius of old, Lincoln stood at the northern end of such a bridge and he would permit no messenger of peace to pass through his careful guard."

Thirty-five UDC and SCV members, including Mrs. Wilcox, were received by Mrs. Truman at the White House after the Capitol ceremony.

The highlight of the birthday celebration will come this afternoon at 2 p. m., when the Confederate organizations unveil the Eastern terminal marker of the Jefferson Davis hwy. The marker is on the Virginia side of Highway Bridge. Senator Alben W. Barkley (D., Ky.) will speak.

4. To delegate powers as it deems appropriate to the executive committee.

5. To appoint and to remove the executive directors as well as to define their functions.

6. To consider and pass the annual estimates of the revenue and expenditure of the council and its departments.

Representatives Elected

The preamble of the agreement reached last Thursday after weeks of negotiations between Generals Clay and Robertson, said the reorganization of the present bizonal economic fusion was being carried out "pending the creation of administrative and governmental institutions for Germany as a whole."

The machinery was set up as follows:

1. An economic council or legislature, numbering about 54 representatives chosen by the state legislatures on the basis of one for each 750,000 population. Its decision will be taken by a majority vote.

2. Under the economic council, a full-time coordinating and executive body—known as the executive committee—of eight members, one from each state and appointed by the state governments. The executive committee's functions are to propose and make recommendations on ordinances for the economic legislature, to issue implementing regulations and to coordinate and supervise the execution of ordinances by executive directors.

3. Executive directors heading the administration of each of the six bi-zonal agencies. They will be responsible to the economic council and under the immediate supervision of the executive committee.

Varga Flees From Hungary

Nagy and Varga might attempt to set up a government in exile.

The informant who told of Varga's flight tried also to clarify Nagy's monetary negotiations with the government—subject of rumor the past three days.

The informant said Nagy asked for 120,000 Swiss francs and 300,000 Hungarian forints—roughly $55,000. He was also to get custody of his son and a pair of knee-high black peasant's boots, which were sent along in the car taking his son out of the country.

For this Nagy promised to keep quiet and hand over all his other possessions, including a 50-acre farm near Pecs and his jewelry, valued at $10,000, the informant added.

The source said Nagy took the jewelry with him when he left for his "vacation" in Switzerland, but that when he resigned he sent it back by his secretary, Ferenc Kapocs, who was later arrested by the Communist-controlled secret police.

Lower-Price Dress Production Jumps

Airline Reduces Freight Rates by 25%; Wason Assails Truman on Taxes, Pay

Makers of dresses and women's coats increased the proportion of production in lower and medium priced lines during March, the Census Bureau reported yesterday.

This slight downtrend in the price structure at wholesale level came after January and February had shown no changes.

Of total dress production in March, the bureau said, 36 per cent was dresses selling for under $6 each at wholesale, compared with 34 per cent in February.

A similar trend occurred in other women's clothing lines with the exceptions of skirts, where production of the group wholesaling at under $39 a dozen declined to 57 per cent in March compared with 59 per cent in February.

Meanwhile, the Justice Department said yesterday it is investigating complaints that a number of Southeastern saw mills "have combined to shut down to hold prices up."

The inquiry was assigned to the Anti-Trust Division. A department official declined to name the source of the complaints.

Air Freight Rates Cut

Chicago, June 2 (AP).—United Air Lines announced today air freight rates on its Natoin-wide system would be reduced by about 25 per cent, beginning August 1, under a new tariff soon to be filed with the Civil Aeronautics Board in Washington.

Under the tariff local shippers would be able to send shipments up to 16,000 pounds for as now as 20 cents a ton mile. On shipments above that amount the rate will continue at 14 cents a ton mile.

Wason Assails Truman Demands

New York, June 2 (U.P.).—Robert R. Wason, chairman of the board of directors of the National Association of Manufacturers, said today that President Truman's demand for price reductions "exhausted itself in words" because of high taxes and increased wages put into prices by the Government.

Wason told the National Association of Purchasing Agents that sentiment "may start movements in the market" but it cannot continue them unless economic conditions justify the movements.

He said it was unlikely that industrial prices would decline much in the last half of this year. Production, he said, however, is bringing down prices and "only Government has retarded the process" which manufacturing promised when it asked for removal of OPA.

Asserting that the Nation "is not in a depression," Wason added:

"There won't be even a serious setback in 1947 unless the President makes it by defeating the people's demands for the correction of labor abuses and for tax reductions to create jobs."

10c Bottled Beer Returns to New York

New York, June 2 (AP).—Beer at 10 cents a bottle will come back tomorrow in the New York metropolitan area.

Samuel Rubel, president of the Ebling Brewing Co., announced the company's 12-ounce bottle will retail at 10 cents, off 2 cents, the quart size at 25 cents, off 4 cents, and the half gallon at 49 cents, off 6 cents.

Rubel said the new price meant "an outright saving of approximately three million dollars annually to consumers in this area."

Chimp Presents Unbilled Act As Circus Opens 6-Day Stand

CIRCUS INTERLUDE—Cheeta, the chimpanzee, staged a walkout on the first performance of the Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey Circus yesterday, and took it to the top—the top of the Big Top, no less. Here he's talking over disputed points with Jenny Vargas, a kind of conciliator

By Charles E. Yarbrough
Post Reporter

Cheeta the Chimpenzee climbed out of his contract with Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey yesterday afternoon.

Guerre's sea lions were barking, clowns were clowning, Cinderella had just found Prince Charmng and Junior-in-the-reserved-seats was both-ears-deep in cotton candy when Cheeta chucked the whole business.

Gibbering a protest, the star of Vargas' "college-bred" chimp show scampered out of the act, scaled the big top's center pole and ran right out the hole at the peak.

There he perched, red cap and red pants snapping in the stiff breeze which flapped flags and pennants which rode the big tent's crest.

It couldn't have gone over better if it had been in the act. The few spectators in the opening afternoon crowd of 3500 who saw Cheeta's unorthodox exit, cheered and applauded wildly. The chimp peered mischievously at the Spanish-spouting, gesticulating Vargas and the senora far below.

Circus workmen gathered outside the tent for the unbilled act and enjoyed a show of their own. A daring one scaled the tent; another one followed him. Between them they plucked Cheeta off his high perch.

Vargas roundly cuffed the chimp, who cowered in his keeper's arms and planted a resounding buss on the Vargas cheek.

The other acts were good, too.

There were yawning gaps of empty seats under the 550-foot big top, but circus officials termed it a "normal" opening day.

While the colorful opening spectacle of Cinderella and Prince Charming rolled majestically around the three rings and two stages, Cinderella's most ardent fan missed the opening.

The fan is tow-haired, 3½-year-old David Alzanas, whose parents and aunts thrilled the crowd with high wire antics. David has a circus for a playground, but he cares for none of it save Cinderella.

Cousin Allan, 4, son of Harold Alzanas, the high wire artist and former Yorkshire coal miner, doesn't even care that much about the circus.

Studded with new European stars for the first time since the war, the circus found an appreciative audience, but the Alzanas lads didn't even watch their own act. "They prefer to climb all over our tent," the father said, "but they'll be in the act before long."

Lilienthal Asks Atom Control Without Veto

Lake Success, N. Y., June 2 (U.P.).—David E. Lilienthal urged the United Nations today to speed establishment of veto-less international control of atomic energy and said that, in the meantime, the United States would work to "maintain and increase our pre-eminence in atomic energy and atomic weapons."

Lilienthal, head of the United States Atomic Energy Commission, said it would be "quite impossible" for international atomic control machinery to function if its day-to-day operations were subject to the veto.

Lilienthal said the world must have "not only an international agreement, but one which will be effective and as nearly foolproof as possible."

He appeared before a closed meeting of the United Nations Atomic Energy Commission to help them plan an administrative setup for the proposed U. N. agency.

He said the "frank and unabashed purpose of the American people" in setting up the U. S. Atomic Energy Commission was to "maintain and increase our pre-eminence in atomic energy and atomic weapons." He added that it was "our firm intention" to do that.

The Soviet was represented by Prof. Dmitri Skobeltzyn, who, when Lilienthal concluded, remarked sarcastically that the delegates had heard about America's atomic program and the TVA, but he did not see the exact connection with U.N.'s atomic problems.

Lilienthal said atom-produced electricity in the United States would be available in 6 to 10 years, and could be distributed by the Federal Government, States or by private industries, depending on the wishes of the consumers affected. He said that the United States would press its technological progress "to make as many plants obsolete as fast as possible."

Lilienthal later told a news conference that adoption of an international control plan "without security" would be "a fraud."

"I cannot see how there would be any security with anything less than the Baruch plan," Lilienthal added.

Other U. N. developments:

1. The U. N. Palestine Investigating Committee, at its first full working meeting, postponed a decision on whether to visit Europe's displaced persons camps. Emil Sandstroem of Sweden was elected committee chairman. Britain, the official Jewish agency and the Arab Higher Committee for Palestine were permitted liaison representatives.

2. Greece submitted a written complaint that Yugoslavia frontier guards fired on Greek army units near the Greek-Yugoslav border March 17, killing one Greek and wounding another.

3. A subcommittee on disarmament scheduled a closed meeting tomorrow to argue over conflicting East-West proposals on how U. N. should go about studying the banning of conventional weapons.

4. U. N. Secretary General Trygve Lie, in a speech broadcast to Switzerland, said no large-scale war is possible "in the foreseeable future," but that the world's greatest danger was the possibility that it would fail to give needy nations relief "in good time."

World C. of C. Head Foresees No Depression Facing U. S.

Montreux, Switzerland, June 2 (U.P.).—Winthrop W. Aldrich, president of the International Chamber of Commerce and leading American banker, said today that there may be a recession in the United States but that Europe need not fear it would turn into a depression.

Addressing the first full congress of the chamber since 1939, Aldrich urged a return to a reasonable free market economy.

"Had the policies of economic liberalism advocated by the International Chamber been adopted, the great depression would doubtless have been restricted to a corrective recession," Aldrich, chairman of the board of the Chase National Bank, told the chamber at its opening meeting.

"One must of course, make a distinction between recession and depression. Recessions are to be expected in a dynamic economy and represent temporary deviations from rapid upward growth.

Distortions Noted Since War

"Since the end of the war, certain distortions have occurred in the price and income structure of the American economy, which may lead to recession.

"Recessions which correct such distortions are not to be feared. Corrective recessions of this character are not accompanied by large unemployment or great deflation. They are necessary to reduce costs and prices to a level which permits an economy to function to best advantage. Moreover, they serve to increase labor productivity and managerial efficiency and lay the basis for further improvements in living standards.

"It should always be remembered that it was the dynamic qualities in the American industrial system which permitted the United States to become the arsenal of democracy during the war.

"Again, it was these dynamic qualities that permitted the rapid conversion from production for war to production for peace.

Shouldn't Fear Depression

"Europe does not need to fear that an American postwar corrective recession will degenerate into a depression.

"The United States is well aware of its strategic role in the world economy, of the need to have an economy free from exaggerated boom and deep depression, of the need to import the products of other nations, and of the need to share in the economic rehabilitation of the world.

"To adopt state planning and controls in an effort to escape recession is to substitute stagnation for progress. The economy becomes overburdened by the unproductive labor of a growing multitude of Government officials and becomes entangled in the web of bureaucratic control.

"The International Chamber stands for a free market economy both internationally and domestically and will continue to oppose the mercantilism of the modern age. To this end, it gives its full support to all efforts to restore multilateralism in trade and to eliminate the repressive domestic controls which are a heritage of the war.

Supports Free Markets

"The International Chamber gives its full support to free market economies because it is convinced that a free enterprise system alone permits full individual freedom and maximum economic progress. 'Freedom and economic progress' are indivisible."

Aldrich said that political and economic freedom, which he called twin freedom one dependent on the other, had accounted for intellectual and material progress in the world's free nations.

Some state intervention in the economic and social life was not necessarily contrary to economic liberalism, he said, including the control and curbing of natural and economic monopolies to make a market a truly competitive one and to equalize bargaining power among various community groups.

But the "expanding functions of government in a free-enterprise economy" need to be distinguished from the economic controls imposed in a totalitarian or in a planned or directed economy, Aldrich said.

If the state were drawn into the exercise of complete domination over the economic system, Aldrich said, individual freedom and initiative were destroyed. Even if full employment were achieved, it would be "the specious full employment of a police state."

Taft and Hartley Make Flat Prediction That Labor Bill Will Be Enacted Into Law

By Alfred Friendly
Post Reporter

Senator Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) and Sepresentative Fred A. Hartley (S., N. J.) yesterday made a flat prediction that their labor bill would be enacted.

In a joint statement defending the measure as "temperate . . . sound and . . . long overdue," the two men, chairmen of the Senate and House Labor Committees, respectively, stated:

"It will become law. We have no doubt of that."

There has been much speculation on whether President Truman will veto the legislation, against which the CIO and AFL have waged a vigorous and costly public campaign. But if the bill is vetoed, the present indications are that it will be overriden by the necessary two thirds vote in both House and Senate. At any rate, Taft and Hartley attached no qualifications to their prediction.

Action Due This Week

The bill comes up for final action in a conference report in the House tomorrow and probably in the Senate the next day.

Taft and Hartley said the law would "go far toward restoring peace to the industrial relations field."

Persons who denounce the bill, they declared, either have not read it, or deliberately misrepresent it.

Taft, meantime, took exception to a story in The Post on Saturday in which certain provisions of the bill were characterized as "sleepers." In particular, he said that two sections, which have a collateral effect of minimizing union discrimination against Negroes, had been discussed in committee with just this point in mind.

Term Unfair, Says Taft

Taft said he also believed these clauses, often referred to as the "colored" clauses, had been mentioned in debate on the Senate floor. Therefore, he said, it was unfair to term them "sleepers," with the implication that they were "sneaked into the bill when no one was watching."

Other congressional experts agreed with The Post's analysis of the effect of the provisions, but asserted that they merely strengthened, but did not change, Supreme Court-approved practice of the National Labor Relations Board.

The new element in the present bill, they said, was to render penalties against discrimination applicable to unions. Hitherto, the risk of discrimination was borne solely by the employer, who could be held liable for back pay if he discharged a man whom the union, for unfair or undemocratic reasons, declined to accept.

At the NLRB, meanwhile, attorneys said they believed that the new provisions meant that unions would be obliged to accept Negro applicants if they wished to operate an effective union shop agreement.

Statement in Part

In their joint statement, Taft and Hartley said in part:

"Those who oppose any form of labor legislation call this a slave labor bill. It does not interfere with the right of the labor leader to call a strike where there is a bona fide dispute between the employer and his own employes, except where the strike is Nation-wide and imperils the national health or safety; and then it only imposes a 60-day cooling off and a strike vote. Only secondary boycotts and jurisdictional strikes are made unlawful. Even in these cases, there is not a word or a phrase in the bill that compels a man to perform one hour of work against his will. . . .

"The bill permits unions to make agreements with employers, under which employes must become members of the union and to pay dues to it. But the union may not impose such an agreement upon the employes if the majority of them oppose it; nor may the union dictate to the employer whom he may hire in the first instance, nor may it deprive a man of his job as long as he is willing to pay dues.

"It may withhold membership or expel a member upon any ground it wishes, but it may not take away his right to work as long as he is willing to pay his share of the cost of maintaining the union.

"The fundamental policy of the Labor Act, to encourage and protect the right to bargain collectively remains unchanged, and the clauses of the act that give effect to that policy remain unchanged. Employers still are forbidden to do what the old act forbade them to do . . .

"The amended act will give to the board power to deal with complaints against unions as well as with those against employers. It may deal with charges that unions have coerced or restrained employers, that they have refused to bargain, that they have required employers to discharge employes unlawfully, that they have engaged in jurisdictional strikes and secondary boycotts.

"It well may be that the opposition of some unions to writing these clauses into the Labor Act will be unfair in applying them arises out of a fear that the board will be as unfair in applying them against unions as it once was in applying the old clauses against employers.

Other Clauses

"We have no fear of any unfairness on the part of the board, because it is no longer set up as a weapon against employers only, but as an impartial quasi-judicial body.

"Other significant clauses of the bill protect individual workers against unfair treatment by unions, protect employers against abuses that almost everyone, including most union leaders, agree are indefensible, and protect the public against practices that unnecessarily restrict output of goods, increase the cost of goods or imperil the public health and safety . . .

"What further changes in our laws may be in order, and what revisions of provisions of the present bill may be called for, depends largely upon the fidelity with which employers, employes and unions alike seek to make our system of free collective bargaining work in the interest of our country as a whole."

Navy to Rule Soon On Yorktown, Va., Bridge Question

By The Associated Press

Rear Admiral John J. Manning said yesterday the Navy may decide on the question of a proposed low level bridge at Yorktown, Va., in the next few days.

Manning, chief of the Bureau of Yards and Docks, said the matter is pending before Assistant Secretary of the Navy W. John Kenny, who has been ill.

The State of Virginia has planned for some years to construct a bridge between Yorktown and Gloucester Point, across York River, but the proposal met with conflicting views among Federal and State agencies.

The Navy has held that a high level bridge was required to allow for Navy needs in the York, while the Department of Interior has contended that a high span would overshadow and spoil the colonial atmosphere of the Yorktown National Park.

The Virginia State Highway Commission has opposed alternative sites higher up the river on the ground such a location would not serve adequately the highway traffic needs of that section.

Houses Passes Bill To Let Town Get Water From D. C.

A bill to permit the town of Falls Church to obtain water from the District water system was passed by the House yesterday.

The measure, which is slated to go to the Senate for approval, would enable the town to buy a supplemental water supply from the District and would not adversely affect the District's supply, according to a report by a House committee which studied the proposal.

The town has been attempting to bolster its water supply for nearly a year to meet demands which, as a result of wartime development around Falls Church, greatly exceed the present supply. Under the proposed hookup, water would be pumped directly into the town's water system from District lines.

continued for duration of the strike to avoid a tieup of box cars at warehouses. Only emergency shipments were being accepted.

Consumers were not expected to feel results of the strike for a week or 10 days.

Contracts with more than 100 operators expired Saturday midnight. The Western Pennsylvania Motor Carriers Association is standing on an offer to boost wages 15 cents an hour, against the union's reduced demand of 35 cents. The AFL General Teamsters, Local 249, originally sought increases varying from 75 cents to $1 hourly.

Rates now range from $1 an hour for ordinary truck helpers to $1.85 for drivers of double-bottom truck-trailers.

Construction Workers Walkout

Huntington, W. Va., June 2 (AP). An estimated 3500 AFL construction workers remained away from their jobs today following expiration of their contracts with members of the General Contractors Association Saturday midnight.

The laborers, painters, lathers, electricians and plumbers voted last Thursday to strike to enforce their undisclosed wage increase demands, and business agent W. E. Reed of the AFL Building and Construction Trades Council, said last night there had been no change in the situation.

The plumbers and electricians, meanwhile, struck against both the general contractors and their own employers. The plumbers sought an increase from $1.75 to $2 an hour, and the electricians from $1.75 to $1.875 per hour.

Hoover Urges Limit on RFC Power to Lend

By The Associated Press

Limiting the lending power of the Reconstruction Finance Corporation to offset its competition with private financial institutions, except in emergencies, was suggested to Congress yesterday by Herbert Hoover.

In a letter to Chairman Wolcott (R., Mich.) of the House Banking Committee, the former President proposed:

1. RFC should be continued for 2 or 3 years, but under revisions that "would tend to get the institution out of the lending business except during economic emergencies."

2. A limitation "might well be placed" on its authority "such as that business or persons seeking loans should present evidence that they have exhausted the possibility of securing credit from private institutions."

3. All RFC loans to foreign countries or persons should be prohibited. Hoover here was discussing RFC only did not mention possible foreign loans by other Government action.

If RFC is continued, he said, "it should be returned to its original purpose and not be limited to loans to private business and self-liquidating loans for public works."

The Banking Committee now is considering legislation to continue RFC beyond its June 30 expiration date.

House Republican Leader Halleck of Indiana, told reporters, "Mr. Hoover's suggestions certainly will be given most careful consideration."

Wolcott also received a telegram from Jesse Jones in which the former RFC chairman said the agency "rendered a great service with a minimum of errors." He told Wolcott, "I am very proud of its record."

Reds Vow to Keep Voice in Shaping Future of Italy

Rome, June 2 (AP).—Communist speakers in Rome and Florence declared tonight that Italy's leftists, although excluded from the new centrist cabinet of Premier Alcide de Gasperi, did not intend to lose their voice in shaping the nation's future.

Giuseppe di Vittorio, Communist boss of the Italian General Labor Confederation, warned at Florence that "we are a colossus of seven million workers."

Meanwhile, thousands of Communists, Socialists and other leftists, massing in Rome's Piazza del Popolo to mark the first anniversary of the Italian republic, heard six speakers declare that the republic was the work of the left, and that the left could not be robbed of its fruits. The demonstration was orderly.

United States Cuts Off Credit To Red Regime in Hungary

sharply rejected, and a similar protest over Hungary is likely to have a similar fate. Its chief value would be to get the American position on record and perhaps also to encourage the predominantly non-Communist people of Hungary—if their new regime allows them to know of it.

Unusual Step for U. S.

The statement on Italy was intended as a direct encouragement to Premier Alcide de Gasperi, who has taken a bold gamble in forming a new cabinet without a single Communist in it.

The United States has seldom, if ever, given such an ostentatious pat on the back to a newly-formed government in any friendly country. Issued over Secretary Marshall's signature, the statement was as follows:

"The American Government naturally wishes every success for Prime Minister de Gasperi and the new Italian government in the difficult tasks which they must face. There are many bonds between Italy and the United States, and the American people have a deep interest in the Italian welfare.

"We are happy to have been of assistance in rebuilding the Italian economy and we shall continue to give aid to the Italian people, who have demonstrated their sincere and abiding faith in democratic processes for the preservation of their individual liberties and basic human rights.

Problems Not Minimized

"There is no desire in the United States to minimize Italy's problems. But the Italians have already overcome many of their most immediate post-war difficulties and I feel that they may recently have been underestimating their own capacity for reconstruction.

"Everyone who comes back from Italy remarks upon the vitality of the people, their will to work and their very real attachment for democracy. The world has watched with admiration and even surprise the progress which the Italians have made thus far in taking up their lives again as a free people.

"I have every confidence that they will continue that progress and with the help we shall give them rebuild Italy as a free and prosperous nation."

The Secretary's accent on "the help we shall give them" explains a good deal of this unusual statement. De Gasperi has been under political fire in Italy for not getting more actual help, as distinct from promises, from the United States.

The Export-Import Bank approved a credit of 100 million dollars while de Gasperie was here last January, but attached so many conditions to it that the Italians were not able to draw upon it to any appreciable extent. It will be extended in installments as various segments of Italian industry prove that they will be able to repay it.

In view of the nature of the Export-Import Bank credit, Secretary Marshall is known to be anxious to take two forms of prompt action, as follows:

(1) To release an estimated 130 million dollars worth of frozen Italian assets in this country. The Treasury took preliminary action on May 20 indicating an early decision to release these assets, which Italy needs desperately because of her dollar shortage.

(2) To give Italy the first and biggest slice of the 350 million dollars relief appropriation, finally signed by President Truman last week. There is some talk of earmarking 75 million dollars of the total to Italy, and rushing the first relief supplies as early as next week.

An Italian mission headed by Deputy Matteo Lombardo is now in this country trying to get quick release of the frozen assets. There have been complaints in the Italian press that Lombardo was getting a "brush-off" in official Washington, but the Italians here have made no such complaints.

The State Department insists it is as anxious as De Gasperi himself to get tangible help to Italy without delay. As seen here, the success of American foreign economic policy and, for that matter, the democratic future of Europe depend on whether Italy and France can weather their economic-political difficulties this year.

This helps to explain the Marshall statement, with its assurance of help to come and its reminder that the Italian people themselves must work harder for their own salvation.

The effects of the Marshall statement in Italy remain to be seen. The Communist press in Italy has charged repeatedly that the United States dictated de Gasperi's choice of a cabinet; the charge has been denied, but it has made the moderate Left and Centre Parties uncomfortable.

There are sure to be renewed charges in Italy that the de Gasperi government is nothing but a puppet in the hands of Uncle Sam. This will not be good for the Italian government, no matter how friendly the Italian people may be, or how much they may need American help.

The surplus property credit to Iran resembles many other transactions made since the end of the war. The Iranians will get credit to buy up to 30 million dollars' worth of surplus American uniforms, shoes and "a few" light tanks and combat planes left behind by the United States Army. An agreement formally extending the credit is expected to be signed in a week or two.

Slur on Truman Protested

Prague, Czechoslovakia, June 2 (U.P.).—United States Ambassador Laurence A. Steinhardt has protested to the Czechoslovak foreign office against a poem in the official Prague Communist weekly which referred to President Truman as "rapacious," an American Embassy spokesman said today.

The poem, by "National Artist" S. K. Neuman, appeared in the May 21 issue of the Communist organ Tvorba. Steinhardt's note to the foreign office was sent May 29.

The poem read, in part: "Attention! Mr. Truman, the count of imperialism, is arriving. It makes no difference if he is considered a hero, busy and rapacious. We despise every dollar boob."

The National Socialist newspaper Svobodne Slovo, however, demanded in an editorial that Communist Premier Klement Gottwald "disown" the poem.

Near Cairo, Egypt, June 2 (U.P.).—Abd el Krim, who led his Moroccan Riffs in insurrection against Spain and France more than 20 years ago, said today that he wanted to return to Morocco to work for its "political independence."

Given refuge by Egypt after he left a ship which was taking him to France for internment after 21 years spent in islation, Abd el Krim said.

"I desire and believe there should not be further bloodshed in Morocco. I believe imperialism is dying. But France and Spain must recognize that fact."

'Juvenile Delinquency' No. 1 Issue, P-TA Told

Chicago, June 2 (AP).—Frances Perkins, former Secretary of Labor, told an audience of parents and teachers tonight "that the outstanding problem is juvenile delinquency."

In an address for the golden jubilee convention fo the National Congress of Parents and Teachers, Miss Perkins, now a member of the United States Civil Service Commission, declared:

"Society needs a pattern of order as never before, and the pattern of order must begin at home with each individual."

She said adults today are often so undisciplined themselves, that the younger generation believes such conduct to be a motivating force of life.

Mrs. L. W. Hughes, of Arlington, Tenn., declared in an address that children must be educated for "a task even harder than fighting a war—and that is helping to maintain the principles which will insure peace."

Mrs. Hughes announced that membership of the national congress had reached an all-time high of more than 4,486,000.

Navy's Island Rule Assailed by Ickes

'Whitewash' of Conditions on Guam Hinted Before House Committee

By The Associated Press

Harold L. Ickes, former Secretary of the Interior, said yesterday that Secretary of the Navy Forrestal had sought to "whitewash" conditions under Navy rulein the Pacific.

Appearing before a House Public Lands subcommittee, Ickes urged immediate restoration of civil rule to the people of Guam and Samoa instead of the present United States Naval Government.

Ickes charged that the Navy has run the islands under a policy of "absolutism," and declared:

"If we require Naval absolutism for reasons of military security in such places, then there is no logical reason why we should not hand over to its benign rule such vital continental regions as Boston, New York harbor, Charleston, San Diego, San Francisco and Seattle."

Noting Secretary of the Interior Krug's recent trip to Guam and Samoa, Ickes said he understood Krug made a report to the White House some time ago and declared "the failure to give out the report excites my curiosity."

"Is it possible that the report contains opinions and recommendations which are in conflict with the desires and purposes of the Navy Department?" he asked.

Ickes also was critical of a bill suggested jointly by the Navy and Interior Departments. He said it makes no provision for transfer of the government of Guam to a "civilian" agency, but rather to any agency the President might select.

But John H. Hilldring, Assistant Secretary of State, said the State Department wants civilian administration of Guam and "likes this bill because it envisages early turnover to a civilian agency."

Hilldring declared the State Department would have no objection to spelling out civilian administration clearly in the law.

House Group Rejects Plan To Keep USES in Labor Dept.

By The Associated Press

The House Expenditures Committee recommended 9 to 4 yesterday that Congress reject President Truman's Government reorganization plan No. 2, which would keep the United States Employment Service permanently in the Labor Department.

The committee approved unanimously plan No. 1, which would make permanent various other wartime shifts, such as transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture of direct control of eight research bureaus in his department.

Mr. Truman submitted both plans to Congress May 1. Unless both Senate and House turn them down previously, they become effective automatically 60 days from that date.

If Congress rejects the No. 2 plan, USES will go bace to the Federal Security Agency when the War Powers Act expires.

That is the course the committee recommended. Many State officials who administer employment and unemployment pay activities favored it in hearings.

Senate Puts Merger Bill On Its Docket

The Senate Republican Policy Committee yesterday definitely slated Senate action this session on Army-Navy unification, but left universal military training undocketed.

In the face of a report by a nine-man presidential commission, recommending universal training as an "urgent military necessity," there were these developments:

1. Senate Steersman Robert A. Taft (R., Ohio) indicated there is little chance of action this session on universal training. He noted no hearings have been held.

2. Senate Armed Services Chairman Chan Gurney (R., S. Dak.) said he will put the presidential commission's report up to a meeting of his full committee tomorrow. Gurney said he will ask his committee "what it feels we should do, and when."

House Hearings Soon

3. House Armed Services Chairman Walter G. Andrews (R., N. Y.), who already has named a subcommittee to hold hearings on a training plan, said his House group will discuss the commission's report today. He predicted hearings will begin within a week or 10 days.

4. Representative R. Ewing Thomason (D., Tex.), a minority member of the House military training subcommittee, said he will move to dispense with lengthy hearings. Thomason proposed that the "exhaustive" hearings held by the old Woodrum committee, be incorporated in the record to avoid duplication and speed action.

The Senate Republican Policy Committee decision to docket Army-Navy unification legislation this session followed similar recent action by House GOP leaders. Taft said he thought the merger bill would reach the floor in July.

Chairman Gurney, whose Armed Services Committee will vote finally on the unification bill tomorrow, said he hopes to get floor action before next month. His committee made public a final draft of its bill Saturday and is expected to approve it by a substantial majority tomorrow.

The bill creates an air force on an equal footing with the Army and Navy. The three departments, each under a secretary, not of Cabinet rank, would retain a lot of their old independence. They would all, however, be under one central head—a Secretary of National Security, with a seat in the Cabinet.

The House Expenditures Committee already has held some hearings on a unification plan but has not agreed on a bill. House hearings are scheduled to resume shortly.

"Our goal should be to at least get a bill reported, ready for congressional action when we come back in January," Representative Thomason said. "We can do that if we start in where the Woodrum Committee left off. We'll never do it if we call all of the old witnesses back."

Thomason said he agreed with presidential committee findings that universal military training is an essential element of national security and foreign policy.

"We are confronting a supreme test as a nation without even a Selective Service law on the books," said the Texan. "We haven't as yet an organized reserve or National Guard, either, that's worthy of the name."

Secretary of War Patterson said the training advisory commission's work was notable for its clear insight into the realities of long-term national security problems. He added:

"It is true that traditional methods and skills employed in warfare are undergoing changes, but the trained soldier is still the key to successful military operations."

"The findings of this commission should put an end to the persistent idea that we have entered into an era of push-button warfare not requiring large numbers of men.

Byrnes to Aid Eric Johnston on Film Problems

Hollywood, June 2 (AP).—Appointment of James F. Byrnes, former Secretary of State, as his counsel on motion picture industry matters, was announced today by Eric Johnston, president of the Association of Motion Picture Producers.

The announcement said the two immediate major industry tasks in which Byrnes would assist Johnston are to "undertake the development of a set of fair trade practices for member companies of the association" and to "protect freedom of the American screen."

Regarding the latter, Johnston said Byrnes would help in preparing the association's case before the House Committee on Un-American Activities. The committee recently took testimony here on reported Communistic activities in the film industry and plans further hearings later in Washington.

Johnston also announced that Y. Frank Freeman, vice president of Paramount Pictures, has been elected board chairman of the picture association. He succeeds Byron Price, who resigned in March to become assistant secretary general of the United Nations.

Veterans Act Evasion Is Charged to U. S.

Government personnel directors were accused yesterday of evading "deliberately" the Veterans Preference Act.

The charge was made by Herbert J. Jacobi, chairman of the American Legion veterans preference committee, testifying before a House Civil Service Subcommittee.

"I am convinced they got together and worked out a way of voiding the act," Jacobi said. He urged legislation to punish Government officials who deprive veterans of Federal jobs.

Feudal Thinking Main Barrier To Reformation of Japanese

Reeducation of Country for Democracy Will Take Long Time, Observer Finds

This is the third of a series of articles by a correspondent who has reviewed the occupation of Japan as it approaches the end of its second year.

By A. T. Steele
Copyright by New York Tribune, Inc.

Tokyo, June 2.—Not every one will agree with Gen. Douglas MacArthur that the new Japanese constitution reflects "one of the great spiritual reformations of mankind." While it is true that the impact of the occupation has set in motion many new lines of thought and behavior among the Japanese, it is equally evident that feudal thinking is still a major obstacle in the reformation of Japan.

In a country so deeply immersed in authoritarian and Confucian tradition as this one, it is going to take a very long time to put over the basic concepts of democracy with the masses of the population. Physical reforms are a big help in the right direction, but they will have to be supplemented by a prolonged process of reeducation.

The reeducation of Japan is well started. The educational experts in General MacArthur's headquarters are, for the most part, a well qualified and refreshingly enthusiastic group of men and women. And the majority of those I have talked with are realistic enough to admit that the biggest part of their problem still lies ahead.

Children Best Field

The most promising field for reeducation is among Japan's 18 million school children. From these youths will come the men who will take leadership after Japan has done her period of penance and is once more free to pick her own course in world affairs.

There is a heavy emphasis also on adult education, especially among women. Long subjugated to male domination in the home and in politics, one would suppose that Japanese women would be ready recruits to democratic ideas. As a matter of fact, the response from those who can be reached is good. Japanese feminists, assisted by a few hard-working women from military government teams and from General MacArthur's headquarters, have been spreading the word on women's new status in country-wide speaking tours. But their numbers are so few that they have been able to make direct contact with only a small cross-section of the whole population. The rest has to be left to word-of-mouth chain reaction and to various forms of publicity. Speakers tell of women walking in for miles to attend perfectural gatherings often carrying babies which they nurse throughout the meetings. They are so new to democratic ways that even the simple matter of electing a chairman presents a major problem.

Women React Slowly

The emergence of Japanese women will be slow. In the average Japanese home the chains of tradition are too strong to be easily broken by directives and laws. Until she learns more about the mysterious new world of "democratic rights" and what it means to her, the Japanese housewife is likely to do pretty much as Papa-san tells her, including how to vote. Thirty-nine women were elected to the lower house of the Japanese Diet in the first elections last year, but their record was far from impressive. Only 15 women made the grade in the second Diet balloting last month.

The men of Japan are an even tougher reeducation problem. In the main their response to democratic teaching is in ratio to how it affects their income and livelihood. The hardest to deal with are those in the 20 to 40-year-old bracket. Soaked in ultranationalism, they have known nothing else.

At the best, adult education in Japan can produce only superficial changes. The real hope is in the schools. And even here sustained effort and surveillance will be necessary for many years if Japanese thinking is to be radically and permanently affected.

The guideposts of educational reform in Japan were set up in the report of the Stoddard mission, a committee of 27 American educationalists who visited Japan early last year. This was an outstandingly able analysis of the problem and its cures. It was recognized, though, that if educational reforms were to be lasting, they would have to be drawn up finally by the Japanese themselves. It was not until a few weeks ago that the Japanese Diet adopted two basic laws on education. Meanwhile, much spadework has been done.

Shortages in Everything

The difficulties are appalling. First, there is the woefully broken-down condition of the Japanese school system. Twenty-two per cent of Japan's war-time teaching staff has been eliminated from the schools either by resignation or by purge. This has removed many of the ideologically unfit, but it has not removed the incompetents. The shortage of teachers is so serious that an educational officer told me: 'We will be lucky in some schools if we can find teachers for the next term capable of holding a book." The average salary for an elementary school teacher in Japan is about 450 yen ($9) a month. It is hardly surprising that normal schools in Japan are having trouble filling their classrooms while other institutions of higher learning are jammed to overflowing.

The reeducation of Japan's 417,000 teachers is the key to the whole educational problem. Under the old system, teachers and students were confined in a totalitarian straitjacket that left almost no room for creative thought or individual enterprise. The new laws outlaw the old paternalistic parrot-like concept of education and replace it with an idea wholly new to the Japanese—"the dignity of the individual." Trying to get this idea over to Japanese teachers is a major source of frustration to American educational officers. The teachers have been so accustomed to teaching by rote and waiting for orders on even the tiniest details that for most of them democratic classroom methods are too revolutionary to grasp.

Plants in Bad Shape

School plants are in bad shape. Of Japan's 40,000 schools and colleges, 4000 were destroyed or damaged by bombing and fire. The average country school is lacking in just about everything except four walls, a roof and grim little rows of desks. Heating is meager, shattered windows are irreplaceable for want of glass and only a small part of the huge quantities of books, labor-story material and recreational equipment needed is available.

One of the most significant educational reforms is the extension of compulsory education for all Japanese children to nine years—an increase of three years over the old requirement. The change will be made gradually, since present facilities are inadequate to accommodate more than one additional grade. Curricula also have undergone drastic revision.

If you were to ask a representative group of Japanese school children what they like most about the American program in Japan, many of them would reply instantly: "The school lunch." American donations have made it possible to provide tens of thousands of nutritious lunches to Japan's undernourished school pupils. These have proved that one of the best approaches to the Japanese mind is by way of the stomach.

Tomorrow: "Inflation Saps Japanese Recovery."

Death Toll In Tornado Mounts to 35

Pine Bluff, Ark., June 2 (AP).—Rehabilitation efforts supplanted rescue work late today in the plantation and bayou country south of here where a tornado killed at least 35, injured hundreds and made additional hundreds homeless.

Approximately 15 persons believed missing were found in the hospital or with friends.

Wading searchers found the body of James F. West, plantation operator, near his demolished home in which his wife and two small children died during the storm which struck with little warning late yesterday.

Pine Bluff's four mortuaries reported they had received the bodies of 15 Negroes and 20 white persons. One of the latter was William Galloway, 35, Pine Bluff utility company linesman, whose skull was pierced by wind-whipped copper power line last night during rescue operations.

The tornado came less than 24 hours after a similar storm had killed six, injured 25 and demolished three-fourths of the Oklahoma town of Leedey, a community of 600 population.

Richard McGill, Jefferson (Pine Bluff) County disaster relief chairman for the American Red Cross, said 50 homes were demolished, 500 homes damaged and 500 other farm buildings were destroyed or damaged.

The majority of the dead were children. At least 10 white children were killed and 11 Negro 'teen-agers died when the storm crumpled a rural youth center.

New Courthouse

The District's urgent need for a new Federal courthouse has long been recognized, and the only real question regarding the project has concerned the timing of its construction. As in the case of so many other improvements, the proposal to build a permanent home for the Federal courts here came as one of many pressing demands—so many that they could not possibly be met in a single year. Fortunately, Congress has now devised a happy compromise. It has passed and the President has signed a bill authorizing acquisition of the site, which is now owned by the District, and preparation of plans for the new courthouse.

At least the initial work can thus get under way and everything will be in readiness for actual construction to begin as soon as the most acute postwar pressures can be relaxed and Congress speaks the final word. We think the site on Constitution ave. and John Marshall pl. has been well chosen—symbolically as well as geographically—and it is good to know that relief of the District Court and the Court of Appeals from their present congestion is in sight. Let us hope that there will be no slipup in the appropriation of the $400,000 needed for the preparation of plans.

Liberty Ships

The difficulty that we all experience in subordinating our particular to our general interests is illustrated in the case of those management and labor interests in the shipping industry which are protesting against the release of 50 Liberty ships for service to Germany. The idea was Mr. Hoover's. Mr. Hoover when he came back from Germany last February recommended ways and means of getting more food to Germany at less cost. One of those methods was to make use of the Liberty ships which, after doing service in Japanese waters, were deteriorating in our harbors. He suggested that they be manned by German sailors and put on the Atlantic run with food in bulk, as, for instance, the potatoes we had to destroy last year, possibly also wheat instead of flour. On the return trip the Liberty ships could serve as transports for homecoming soldiers.

The advantages of this suggestion are not limited to the advantage of enabling us to get larger quantities of food into Germany at less cost. Another advantage is that it would not call for additional American personnel. A third is that the German crews could be paid in marks instead of dollars, thus saving us an estimated 40 million dollars annually in occupation expense for the British-American zone in Germany. Opposition to this suggestion strikes us as dog-in-the-manger, for shipping space is now at a premium, and, in consequence, no loss of business or employment would be sustained by the shipping industry.

Stalemate

The grounds on which the American sponsors of a Soviet-American chess match have called off a return engagement in New York may bring commiseration from our State Department. Last September the Americans were beaten, but by such a narrow margin that they invited the victors to New York for another tournament. The Soviet champions agreed, but the negotiations seem to have bogged down, with the Russians beginning a series of postponements as far back as January. After the last delaying cable, the American side decided to drop the matter, with the statement that they were tired of Russian "stalling." They make no attempt to figure out why the Russians are "stalling," but the suspicion will be that this is another Muscovite maneuver having political significance.

Is it? Everybody, of course, knows that the patience of the Tartar is monumental, that ours is limited by a mercurial temperament. Are the Russians trying to get the Americans so rattled that when the joust takes place they will be off their game? Or are they "waiting for the American slump," along with 175 million other Russians, on the assumption that it will so wear down their opposite numbers that they will be easy game. Our own conjecture is not so sinister. In our view the delay is merely another sign of the top-heavy bureaucracy at work in the Moscow beehive. Even a chess tournament, as was shown by the Moscow meet last September, is a diplomatic event in an unfree country, and you may be sure that the New York invitation had to be handled on all the layers of Moscow's bureaucracy right up to the top. The stalling, in other words, is merely the stalling of a circumlocution office, and the chess players of the Nation now have an idea what our State Department has to put up with. The diplomat, however, cannot afford the luxury of getting tired of it.

Hungary's Plight

William C. Bullitt in his book, The Great Globe Itself, likened expansionist Russia to an amoeba, which flows over and absorbs everything digestible in its path, and retires only when it strikes something indigestible. The analogy has a certain aptness in the case of Hungary. It is not quite correct, however. Hungary took a long time in becoming digestible, and the softening was done by the Russians themselves, the process starting with a systematic drive to keep Hungary impoverished. Half of the current output of Hungary's manufacturing industry, which is operating at only one third of the prewar level, is earmarked for reparations and other Russian requirements. Russia takes over three quarters of Hungary's coal and iron. Her requisitions of foodstuffs from crops and stores are said to have attained huge figures. The currency has been ruined, thereby fulfilling Lenin's prescription of the most effectual way of bringing on chaos. That was how the Russians readied Hungary for absorption.

However, the Hungarians lived up to their historic reputation for toughness and plain cussedness. In November, 1945, there was an election under the nose of a Russian army of occupation with Marshal Voroshilov at the head of it. It was a fair election, and, as a result, the Communists polled only 17 per cent of the vote, with the anti-Communist Smallholders accounting for 57 per cent. It was then that the Russians started to bore from within the political structure of Hungary. They insisted on the setting up of a coalition ministry under the Smallholders leader, Ferenc Nagy, a small-town editor. No premier's lot can have been less enviable. The Russians saddled upon him a Communist deputy premier by the name of Matyas Rakosi, a squat, unprepossessing person who acted virtually as Nagy's jailer. This was observed when Nagy came to Washington last June. Rakosi stayed constantly at his side, even on social occasions, and Nagy was able to give him the slip only two or three times. At these times Nagy explained his predicament, and said that if he could get his family out of Hungary, he would not go back.

This is exactly what Nagy has now done. Three months ago, the Russian general, V. P. Sviridov, who succeeded Voroshilov as head of the so-called Allied Control Commission (no doubt with instructions to do better than Voroshilov did), arrested the secretary of the Smallholders, Bela Kovacs. He was charged with treason. It was the start of a campaign of intimidation and intrigue and persecution that, quickened by Allied pressure for a peace treaty with Austria, eventually persuaded Nagy to seek refuge in Switzerland. He refused to resign the premiership, however, till the only member of his family remaining in Hungary was given permission to leave. This has now been accomplished, and Nagy has handed in his resignation, his place being filled by Lajos Dimmeyes, another Smallholder, but so compliant that he was designated by the Russians themselves. The reins of power, undoubtedly, are now firmly in the hands of the Soviet stooge, Rakosi.

This is a case study of the destruction of a nation's independence. Yet it has all been done by methods which, however barefaced they may have been, have maintained a continuity of constitutional government. This aggression is something new in political experience. It is outside the scope of the United Nations, except that the Assembly, as the forum of public opinion, retains the right to turn the spotlight on any kind of aggression. It justifies the diplomatic forehandedness of the Truman Doctrine. Aid to Greece and Turkey was inspired by knowledge of the amoeba-like pressure against these countries. The location of Hungary makes the same program impossible to apply in its behalf even if Hungary were able to call for help. In addition to shelving the scheduled credits, we shall presumably keep the record straight by adding another protest against the final act in the strangulation of Hungary. But our activity must not remain a matter of paper work; we must encourage Hungarian resistance by bringing up the case of Hungary on the floor of the United Nations Assembly, as well as in ways that may be opened up in the future.

Universal Training

The frittering away of American military strength has been one of the most alarming facets of the postwar world. Our present military forces are, the President's Advisory Commission on Universal Training notes, a "hollow shell," with the air forces virtually dismantled and the ground forces reduced to two and one third effective combat divisions. Even though the threat of aggression is not immediate, this present weakness can do our cause inestimable damage. For, the report notes, "One of the deterrents to the effectiveness of the United Nations is the belief of other nations that we are stripping ourselves of the strength necessary to support our moral leadership."

Actually the presidential commission study is recognition of the fact that adequate national security has entered a new phase. We can no longer rely on oceanic isolation to give us a breathing period in which to organize. Because of its wealth and position of leadership, the United States is the logical first target for aggression. General Eisenhower has warned that "the decision in a future conflict would be determined by our ability to act and react in the first 60 days, rather than the twelfth, eighteenth or twenty-fourth month, as in past wars." In other words, we must be ready, and that readiness is in itself the best guarantee that we will not be challenged. Universal training of itself would not provide adequate security. It cannot be evaluated, as the commission notes, "except in its relation to, and its effect upon, many other activities." But, aside from its incidental benefits, there is sound military reason for universal training in building up a reserve of men who could be mobilized quickly in an emergency. The recommendation does not come from military men, but from a group of educators and businessmen of national eminence who have considered the whole problem of our security on a broad level. No realist could look for passage of universal training legislation in this session of Congress. Doubtless we shall have to settle for the Army-Navy merger, without which, according to the commission, "there can be no realistic planning or preparation for the kind of defensive and offensive strategy required for modern war." Meanwhile, however, the report on universal training should be required reading for every American concerned with his country's future.

Flaming Death

Probably no safety devices yet known would have prevented the horrifying plane disasters over Memorial Day weekend. Ninety-five persons died grisly deaths as the result of the take-off crackup of a United Air Lines Skymaster at New York's LaGuardia Airport and the peculiar crash of an Eastern Air Lines transport near Bainbridge, Md. Aside from the fact that both planes were DC-4s, there was little similarity in the accidents. Apparently, as CAB Chairman James M. Landis has indicated, the United craft was caught by the downdraft of a sudden squall as the pilot sought to lift it from the short runway. By the time it became obvious that the plane would not rise, the pilot's efforts to brake it were of no avail, and the airliner came to an abrupt and fiery halt in a marsh. The background of the second tragedy was more mysterious. There was no apparent reason why the Eastern transport should be flying along serenely one moment and plunging to its doom the next. This plane was a converted Army C-54, and one theory is that it had a structural defect. The precise cause, however, will be difficult to determine, for there were no survivors.

If there is any moral in the LaGuardia disaster, it is that the elements still hold the whip hand in air transportation. In this respect air travel differs conspicuously from land and water carriers. These can buck the weather to the limits of their strength. But a plane must defer to the vagaries of the air, at least at the crucial time of take-off, for the first 500 feet of altitude are the most critical. Whether the tower authorities erred in permitting this particular ill-fated excursion to leave in view of the threatening weather is something that can be determined only by investigation. Certainly investigators ought to consider the potential danger of the abnormally short runway, however adequate it is for normal operations. Likewise, only investigation can disclose any defection in inspection of the Eastern plane, though doubtless the conclusions will be somewhat problematical.

Meanwhile, there is no reason to lose confidence in air travel because of these two crashes, terrifying as they were. A proportion of accidents is to be expected in the volume of our tremendously expanded airline operations. It is, however, a minute proportion, and despite accidents such as these, the airline safety record is constantly improving. Nor is there reason to doubt the efficacy of the increasing numbers of safety aids for the specific protection they are designed to give. What the weekend tragedies do illustrate is that safe air transportation is still afflicted with imponderables, both of the weather and the unknown, and this handicap must be fully recognized in air travel development.

JAZZ BEAT

Beat on the traps, bang on the cymbals, rattle the gourds, tumble on the tomtoms, loosen your shoulders like honey in summer, loosen those toes, boys, reach for the air.
(And the deep bass drum goes pounding in under, your blood beats fast, drum beat never changes.)
Throw him a dollar, boys, let him shoot the works, swatter on the drum face hushes for a moment.
Smack on the bells now, once on the wood, and a husha-mama-daddy and a husha-mama-daddy,
and the beating hearts moving round the floor, and the curled lips loosen, eyes look to eyes, fingers on flesh and the nerves all open, nothing's hidden any more, panther on the face and panther in the muscles, and the deep wild joy of the earth moving (and the deep bass drum goes pounding in under, drum beat never changes.)

Split Decisions

The Supreme Court has just given us another example of how necessary it has become to devise some kind of a procedure which will permit, in instances where a law is vague and obscure, to ask Congress either to clarify it as to its intent, or, if necessary, to amend it.

About two months ago the Supreme Court decided by a 5-to-4 vote (!) that foremen and other supervisory employes had the right to organize and bargain collectively. By the same token there is no reason why logically the whole management, with the exception of directors, should not be classed as employes.

When the Supreme Court has divided its opinion to the extent that it has in the decision regarding the rights of foremen to organize, it seems to me undeniable that it is legislating and not interpreting a law or a statute. If a statute is so badly written, so obscure, that nine men of the caliber of the Justices of the Supreme Court cannot agree upon its meaning, then it seems to me that it should be declared unconstitutional on the grounds that the intent of Congress is not clear.

I have serious doubts that the decision of the Supreme Court is in line with the intention of Congress and with the opinion of the entire country, or at least with the opinion of those who understand the working of our competitive economic system. The Ford Co. is in real trouble on account of this decision of the Supreme Court, and a mess is bound to result out of it.

We had the same absurd situation after the decision of the Supreme Court on the portal-to-portal case. Fortunately, public opinion has been aroused, and Congress too, because the very life of our economic system was put in jeopardy and a great deal of Government money was involved. But justice should be justice, whether the consequences are appalling, or medium-sized, or small. I submit again that some procedure must be instituted whereby if the Court of Appeals or the Supreme Court cannot agree unanimously on the interpretation to be given to a particular point in a law, it should be sent back to Congress for clarification of intent.

"Communist Veterans"

Your editorial page on this Memorial Day is too offensive for me to remain silent. Your studied refusal to pay a decent tribute to the fallen dead of this country on the very day that has been dedicated to their memory is disgusting. You desecrate the occasion by defending freedom for the treasonable activities of the Communist Party and its members.

No veteran ever defended this Republic and at the same time remained true to the slavish principles of the Communist Party and its dark and dread ideas of tyranny over the human spirit which you term "a political belief."

"A house divided against itself cannot stand. I do not expect the house to fall—but I do expect it will cease to be divided. Either the opponents of slavery will arrest the further spread of it and place it where the public mind shall rest in the belief that it is in course of ultimate extinction or its advocates will push it forward." This bold prophecy was made by Abraham Lincoln in 1858. I recommend your study of his Gettysburg address in which he called for completion of the unfinished work of the dead so that the cause of freedom would not perish.

Editor's Note: The point of our editorial was that Communists who served in the armed forces were accepted on the same basis as every other veteran. In no sense do we defend "treasonable activities," but we do maintain that veterans' benefits must be determined on the basis of service rather than political belief.

It seems unbelievable that anyone could entertain the idea that it is American to deny a veteran or anyone else his rights because of his ideas.

However, if we intend to do so, let's carry it further. Let's bar from their benefits GIs who believe in anything un-American. This will include, as well as Communists, those who advocate segregation of the races, restriction of Jews from residential property or hotel accommodations, restrictions against Catholics. It will include members of the Ku Klux Klan, the Columbians, etc., as well as those "in sympathy with the general aims" of the organizations.

Same Story

While browsing through some old papers the other day, I ran across Vol. 1, No. 1 of the Public Ledger, Philadelphia, Friday, March 25, 1836 (Price 1 cent), which said:

"The congressional news up to this date possesses not the slightest interest—Congress seems determined to fritter away its time, instead of rendering it profitable to the Nation—shame on such tardy legislation."

The thought ran through my mind—is Congress any different these days? RUTH B. CLARK.

Packages To Germany

Why isn't it possible to remove restrictions on the weight for gift parcels to Germany, as has been done for other countries, and even reduce the rate for these packages? The contents of an 11-pound package with essentials such as flour and cereals hardly justify the efforts of the sender. The postage, not counting the cost of purchasing, is $1.54 for 11 pounds. If we could send twice as much it would be so much more satisfying for receiver and sender.

National Theater

The Theater Guild is presently circularizing its membership inviting renewals of subscriptions for next season.

I have written the guild, stating that I am not interested in attending any more plays at the National until the management reverses its policy of nonadmission of certain Americans. I, therefore, declined to renew my membership.

I believe that it is more important to attain and preserve democracy than it is to see and hear these plays which other persons are denied the right to enjoy.

. . . It is difficult to understand just why Negroes will contaminate the stage of one theater but not of another, or why they will contaminate a stage, but not the audience which watches that stage.

In many of our major cities, such as Chicago, in our Library of Congress, in the Interdepartmental Auditorium and in the audiences of Constitution Hall, I have observed many audiences composed of both white and colored persons, but with: (1) no racial disturbances, tensions or incidents; (2) no lack of attendance by whites because of the admission of colored persons, and (3) no other unfavorable or undesirable reactions.

Food Vs. Communism

If Congress fails to appropriate the 725 million dollars requested by the War Department for food and collateral relief requirements in Germany, Japan and Korea, a considerable portion of what we have fought for will be nullified and we might just as well turn our occupied areas throughout the world over to the Soviet government.

It may seem paradoxical to advocate the allotment of a vast sum of money to feed and rehabilitate the inhabitants of countries whose sworn purpose only a few years ago was our annihilation. Be that as it may, the time has come when we must face the facts.

Germany is an excellent object lesson.

Germany today is an extremely fertile field for the development of communism. I have recently returned from over two years of service in Germany, during which period I served as a Military Government criminal investigator, public safety and special branch (denazification) officer, legal officer, chief of the German courts branch and chief of the Military Government courts branch of the legal division of the office of Military Government for Bavaria. My work brought me into daily contact with the German people, both at home and at work.

One of the most interesting reactions which I encountered during this period was the transition of the German people in the United States zone from an attitude of abject terror and horror in connection with the Russians, to a frame of mind which was evidenced by an active interest in affairs and activities in the Russian zone, coupled with the general attitude that in that zone food and the necessities of life were adequate, if not plentiful.

Thus, as Communist propaganda began to infiltrate into the American zone, Germans who had heretofore mentioned Soviet Russia only in a whisper, accompanied by a shudder, began to remark: "If there were only a way in which we could move to the Russian zone, we would certainly do so. There the people have something to eat."

Food is the most powerful political weapon in the world. It is one which we can and must use to our advantage if we are to stop the spread of communism in the British and American zones of Germany. A hungry man has no scruples of any kind. He will follow any credo for something to eat.

The Communists have made only a negligible showing at the polls in the elections in the United States, British and French zones of Germany during the past year. They are presently conducting an intensive propaganda campaign by radio, rumor and rabble rousing. There is still hope in democracy and in the few remaining democratic nations of the world. That hope has been steadily waning, but there is still time. Let us supply the Germans with the necessities of life so as to enable them to build a real democratic nation. Once the Communists control Germany it will be too late, for as Germany goes, so goes all of Europe, and there isn't much left of Europe right now.

Democracy cannot flourish in the midst of chaos and starvation. Money invested now by the American people in the future of Europe may well mean the saving of millions of American lives and untold amounts of money in the future. ELI E. NOBLEMAN.

Washington Calling

By Marquis Childs

Veto Or Not?

PRESIDENT TRUMAN has come from his vigil at his mother's bedside to face what is perhaps the most critical decision of his political career. To veto or not to veto is the question before the White House.

The action he takes on the tax and labor bills will have far-reaching consequences. The loud echo of it is bound to be heard in next year's campaign.

A veto of the Republican tax bill is taken for granted. The President has consistently opposed any tax reduction this year, arguing that such a reduction would contribute to inflation. He has also repeatedly urged the need to begin scaling down the vast national debt as quickly as possible.

Present indications are for a veto of the labor bill as well. That is the weight of the advice being given the President by his principal advisers. This is so even though it is considered fairly certain that the omnibus labor bill will be passed over the presidential veto.

Democratic leaders have studied the situation that would exist in the Senate after a veto. To sustain the President's action a switch of a minimum of seven votes would be required. The prospect is that not more than three or four of the Democratic Senators originally voting in favor of the measure can be persuaded to change their position and uphold the President.

THE MOST cogent argument for a veto runs something like this, as presented in the memoranda now on the President's desk. While the public has been led to believe that the Senate bill is moderate as compared to the measure passed by the House, actually this is a deception.

The Senate bill, to be finally approved by both houses in most of its details, will seriously alter the position of labor. The ban on the closed shop, if nothing else, will greatly weaken labor's bargaining position. This will be a dangerous thing to do, above all, because of the effect on the whole economy. That is to say, if labor is weakened, then labor will get a smaller share of the pile to be divided between capital and wage earners. Obviously, therefore, we shall have a reduction in the purchasing power of the great mass of the consuming public.

A volume of mass purchasing power is essential if Mr. and Mrs. Average Citizen are to be able to absorb the goods coming out of America's greatly expanded productive machine. This is close to the statement of Harold Stassen in his interview in this column in which he said that "strong unions" were necessary for a healthy economy.

A second argument in favor of veto relates to the brief duration of the test accorded the Wagner Act. The war put an end to bargaining under the act after it had been in operation little more than six years. With price fixing and wage control, free collective bargaining was impossible. Such a brief test was not sufficient to determine whether fundamental changes are necessary in our labor laws.

THOSE WHO make these arguments are not blind to the stupidities, the arrogance, the corruption even, of some labor leaders and some segments of organized labor. But they argue that these symptoms of immaturity should not be used as a justification for the kind of action that can harm not labor alone, but all of us.

At the same time, the President's advisers are acutely aware of the difficult political situation that has been created. If the wild-eyed reactionaries in the House had prevailed, there would be no problem. The Hartley labor bill was so crude and so unworkable that a veto would have been sustained both in Congress and by public opinion.

But "moderation" in the Senate won the day. Senator Irving M. Ives of New York worked persistently and skillfully with a broad background of knowledge for the kind of labor bill he believed would be passed over a veto.

So much emphasis has been put on the contrast between the "moderation" of the Senate and the "extremism" of the House that the public has the impression the Senate measure would make comparatively little change in the pattern of collective bargaining. This, the proponents of a veto insist, is not true.

At the same time, however, they know that the impression of moderation is a political hurdle—and a big one. How to get over it is the problem to be solved in writing a veto message if, and when, the President finally reaches that decision. Certainly there is advice on the other side. And the man who must say yes or no when all the cards are down is Mr. Truman himself, as it is likewise Mr. Truman who must accept the consequences of his act.

Divorce Laws

Senator Arthur Capper should be commended for his efforts, as reported recently, to unify the divorce laws of the various States. How badly needed is such legislation came to my attention after reading in a magazine that for every 100 divorces there are 30 annulments. This increase in annulments is apparently caused by the complexities and disparities of the divorce laws of the States which encourage using the annulment as a means of separation for adult couples; originally, the annulment was designed for underage youngsters.

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

A Serious Setback

Lippmann

THE KREMLIN has also been making plans, and the first installment of them is now being applied. The overt act is the seizure of power in Hungary by the Communists. This was preceded by Mr. Molotov's insistence at the Moscow Conference upon terms for Austria which it was impossible to agree to. The terms were meant to be impossible to agree to. For if there had been an Austrian peace treaty, the Red army would have had no license for remaining in Hungary after the Senate ratified the Hungarian peace treaty. It was in order to stay in Hungary and then to seize power that Mr. Molotov prevented agreement on Austria at the Moscow Conference.

The seizure of power in Hungary has far-reaching strategical importance. It means that Romania is surrounded. It means that Czechoslovakia now has a long common frontier with a completely Soviet - dominated state. It means that Tito's Yugoslavia has behind it this same Soviet-dominated state. It means that the pressure on the northern frontier of Greece can be intensified because there is now no gap in the Soviet network of communication down through the Balkans. But most important of all the Soviet network of communications to the southwest has been completed just as the situation in Italy is mounting to a crisis. The coup in Hungary is timed perfectly to enable the Soviet government to get at Italy from Yugoslavia and Albania and to make the most of its opportunities there.

IT IS NOT entirely clear at this distance whether the Communists deliberately provoked Prime Minister de Gasperi to exclude them and the main Socialist Party from the government, or whether the initiative came from his own party and from those who believe the time has come for a showdown with communism. In any event the fact is that the new Italian government does not represent the majority in the legislature. The Communists and the bulk of the Socialists are not only on the outside, but in open opposition, and on the verge of rebellion.

There are ominous but credible reports that an Italian guerilla movement against the government is forming. The main strength of the guerillas, or "partisans" as they are called, would, of course, be in the northern industrial centers of Italy, in the valley of the Po and the plains of Lombardy, which back up upon the Yugoslav frontier. Thus Italian guerilla actions and a Communist-Socialist rebellion against the government in Rome can now be supported directly overland from Hungary through Yugoslavia.

WE HAVE HERE the Russian strategical counteroffensive to the Truman doctrine, or rather the first phase of the counter-offensive. The pressure on Greece continues, but at the same time the Soviets have opened up a new avenue of influence and power into northern Italy and the central Mediterranean.

The Truman policy has been to try to contain the Soviets by small measures at all the weak spots on the periphery, and if not to encourage, at least not to discourage, the view in all the threatened countries that we favor showdowns with the Communists everywhere and are prepared and able to support those who bring about a showdown. This policy has now been struck a sharp blow.

THE PLAIN and bitter truth is that the Russians are better prepared for a showdown than we are. They are operating near to the sources of their own power. We are operating at a great distance. They are organized inside the critical countries. We have not even made the plan, much less appropriated the money, for the reconstruction of Europe which would, we hope and believe, rally the masses of the people against submission to the kind of thing that has just happened in Hungary. It takes only a few weeks to prepare and only a few days to carry out the seizure of power, and it costs almost nothing. It takes months and months to plan recovery, months and months to debate the plan, and years to make the plan work.

Under the circumstances it cannot have been wise to invite, or even to let the world think we were inviting, a general showdown all along the line. In diplomacy as in war a premature showdown is the way to get a bloody nose.

THE TRUMAN doctrine, which was superimposed unnecessarily and most unwisely upon the concrete problem of supporting Greece and Turkey, has got us into a position which the Russians can exploit in Hungary, in Italy, perhaps later in France. The great big hot words which Mr. Truman uttered so eloquently cannot at this time be made good by effective deeds. It would, therefore, have been better not to utter them.

The setback to our diplomacy and our prestige, which we have now suffered, is serious. But it is not final and fatal, and we are quite strong enough to recognize that we have had a setback, and to profit by it, and in the end to reverse it. But we must face up to the fact that this contest can be won only by very large measures of political construction and of economic aid, that the time for planning and acting is shorter than we have assumed, and that we can indulge in no more diplomacy by doctrines, slogans, and attitudes if we are to retrieve successfully the important ground which has been lost.

Wool Bill

By Mark Sullivan

Factors In The President's Dilemma

IT IS NOT merely two major bills that face President Truman for signature or veto, it is three. The two that everybody is watching—the tax bill and the labor bill — are as important as common talk says they are. But the so-called "wool bill" contains even more headaches for President Truman.

Sullivan

Mr. Truman's decisions about the tax bill and labor bills are a matter of balancing one set of considerations against another. But in the case of the wool bill there are considerations which bear upon Mr. Truman with peculiar and paramount force.

The wool bill does two things, both containing dynamite. First, it supports the price of wool at the present figure, which was already fixed by Government and is very high, 42 cents a pound. Second, the bill provides for increasing the tariff on wool. That is already high, averaging about 17 cents a pound. On top of that the bill places an "import fee"—a semantic term for a tariff increase—whenever imports interfere with keeping the price of domestic wool up to 42 cents a pound. To keep up the price of wool is the purpose which the bill seeks.

THAT MR. TRUMAN should, by an affirmative action of his own, keep up the price of an important commodity in practically universal use, would run counter to a consideration which one would expect to weigh strongly with him. For several months Mr. Truman has earnestly advocated a lower level of prices. Partly because of his exhortations, and concretely because of the burden of high prices on the public, the country is in a mood which calls strongly for what Mr. Truman has urged. The country wants lower prices.

Another consideration must have strong force with Mr. Truman. When he weighs whether to sign the wool bill or veto it, he weighs more than the price of wool. He has proclaimed for America a momentous policy, it has passed into the talk of the world as the "Truman doctrine." The purpose of the Truman doctrine is to restore the world to economic health, and the principal means of restoration is increase of trade between nations. To this end Mr. Truman has said it is necessary for "the other nations of the world to join us in reducing barriers to trade . . . We have proposed negotiations toward the reduction of tariffs."

At the moment when the wool bill was being considered in Congress, there was under way a conference of nations at Geneva to set up international machinery for reducing barriers to trade. We had a representative at the conference, Undersecretary of State Will Clayton, and he flew hurriedly back to America to try to prevent passage of the wool bill. Said he: "If we at this time, when we are actually negotiating with other countries at Geneva for the lowering of trade barriers, raise new barriers as this bill proposes, we stand convicted of insincerity."

INCREASE OF our tariff on wool would be peculiarly deadly to Mr. Truman's foreign trade policy, for the reason that to us wool is a small matter; it is less than one-half of 1 per cent of our agricultural production. But to some other countries, especially Australia, wool is the most important crop, and opportunity to sell it to us is the principal means of buying from us. Increase by us of our tariff on wool would alarm the world over the possibility of increases on other products. The hope of world-wide tariff reductions would vanish. Signing of the wool bill by President Truman would amount to saying, "I hereby abandon the Truman policy about international trade."

There is one consideration which makes the problem complex and deprives the wool bill of being solely a deference to a small number of wool raisers, chiefly in Western States. Wool is in wartime a military necessity, the Army has called it a "strategic material." For this reason it is desirable that our wool raising industry be kept alive. How to accomplish this, but at the same time not increase the tariff on wool, and not raise the price of wool to private consumers, is the problem. A proposed answer is that the Government pay to each wool grower an amount of money which will enable him to sell his crop to private purchasers in competition with foreign producers.

Another Victim

By Barnet Nover

Coup D'Etat In Hungary

THE COMMUNIST coup d'etat in Hungary is being described as Russia's reply to the Truman doctrine.

This puts the cart before the horse. Long before the Truman doctrine was proclaimed, on March 12, 1947, Russia had begun her efforts to transform Hungary into a Soviet satellite.

NOVER

Indeed, it was precisely because of the fear that the course of events in Hungary (as well as what had taken place in Yugoslavia, Albania, Bulgaria, Romania and Poland) would be duplicated in Greece and Turkey that President Truman made his now historic declaration to Congress.

Even had he kept silent, it is extremely doubtful whether Hungary's political evolution would have taken a form different from what it has proved to be.

THE TRUMAN doctrine can save Greece and Turkey from being taken over by agents of the Kremlin. It cannot save Hungary from that fate.

The one thing that could have saved Hungary was the presence in that country of an American army as determined to uphold Hungarian democracy as the Red army has shown itself determined to destroy it.

The only army in Hungary, since that country was occupied, has been the Russian. In carrying out the armistice terms, this occupation force is supposed to be subject to an Allied Control Commission. Actually, that commission has been a powerless body.

The Russians have done in Hungary just about what they pleased. Backed by the occupation forces the Hungarian Communists, under Matthias Rakosi, for years a member of the governing body of the Comintern, long ago began to conspire to take over the government regardless of the wishes of the Hungarian people as expressed at the polls.

THE LAST Hungarian general election, at which this popular sentiment was expressed, was an oddity in east European elections since the war.

It was the only one in any country under Russian occupation which literally followed the Yalta formula. It was, in truth, "free and unfettered," based on universal suffrage and secret ballot.

Exactly why the Russians permitted that election to be held is still a mystery. Perhaps they assumed that the Communists were much stronger than they proved to be. Perhaps they decided that it was too early (this was November, 1945) to show their hand in Hungary. Perhaps they were reassured by the pre-election agreement to continue the coalition of Communists, Socialists and Small Landholders, no matter what the election results might be.

At any rate, the elections gave the anti-Communist Small Landholders Party a clear majority of all seats in the National Assembly—222 out of 420, with the Communists a poor second—70 seats—and the Socialists close behind the Communists with 69 places.

INSIDE the government, however, the Communists were far stronger than they were in the country. Not only did Rakosi stay on as vice premier but the Communists continued in control of the vital ministry of the interior which has authority over the police system.

In fact, not many months after the election, the Communists began a campaign of attrition against the majority group which has now all but destroyed the Small Landholders Party.

In April, 1946, they forced that party to purge itself of 20 members. Later, at their insistence, the party's secretary, Bela Kovacs, was arrested by the Russian military forces on the charge of a conspiracy against the republic.

Both Great Britain and the United States insisted that charges against him be investigated by an impartial body. This demand was rejected by Moscow on the ground that it would constitute an interference in the internal affairs of Hungary!

Now Premier Ferenc Nagy and Foreign Minister Janos Gyongyosy have been forced out, the former while vacationing in Switzerland.

Nagy will be lucky if he is not tried in absentia on the ground of treason. That will be the fate of all those who do not see eye to eye with the Communists. As one Hungarian Socialist newspaper put it: "All Fascist, anti-revolutionary and even reactionary behavior is the equivalent of high treason."

All that remains to give the stamp of "legality" to outright Communist control of Hungary will be an election. What that election will show we know from what has happened in Yugoslavia, Albania, Romania, Bulgaria and Poland.

'Only Solution Is Violence'

Pact With Tito Is Predicted By Greek Guerilla Bandit

By M. W. Fodor
Post Reporter

Athens, June 2.—"There is no other solution but a violent one," exclaimed my bandit friend. "E. A. M. (the Communist-led Movement for National Liberation) must take power. We will increase our guerillas to a strength of 60,000. And if we have a government-in-the-mountains once more, we will conclude an alliance with Marshal Tito of Yugoslavia."

The conversation took place in a filthy small cafe in one of the working-class suburbs of Athens. The cafe was dark. It reeked of garlic, ouzo (the anise-tasting national drink of the Greeks) and of human sweat. My friend was unkempt and wore a three-week-old beard. He accepted eagerly the American cigarette I offered him.

My friend was a guerilla during the civil war in the district of Levadhia, one of the prosperous textile towns of central Greece. I knew him from the days of the fighting in 1944-1945.

He now came from Parnassus, the high peak in northwestern Greece where once the muses and their patron, the god Apollo, had their seat. Now the bandits occupy the peak. . . .

Dimitrios told me that there are about 300 guerillas on Mount Parnassus, under the leadership of Ion Tromaras. The captain recently had sent a girl bandit to Athens to headquarters, proposing to reinforce the "Andartes" (guerillas) on the Parnassus to 3000, and then to attack the cities of Levadhia, Thebes and Lamia. My bandit friend was very disheartened because the "bosses" in Athens answered, "The time has not yet come!"

Thus they were instructed to keep quiet, to lie low. They were permited to invade the villages round the three towns, but the prohibition to attack these towns was absolute.

Dimitrios told me that they follow a policy of feverish recruiting of new bandits. They have instruction to blow up bridges, and by this method to rupture the communications of the Greek military forces.

As to the American aid he said: "We consider it a provocation to the starving Greek people. The propaganda you use against Russia is camouflage. What you want is to capture the Greek markets."

Dimitrios then boasted that EAM had sent 5000 guerillas to the Peloponnesos. He also told me that the Communists are reorganizing the party.

"Fifteen thousand Communist Party members who were either not trustworthy or energetic enough, were stricken from the party lists. We can easily recruit 15,000 other good ones in their stead," said Dimitrios.

He also said that "we don't recognize the coming amnesty because we have no confidence in the present Monarcho-Fascist government. We will increase our forces to 60,000, which will enable us to seize power or to form a government-in-the-mountains. We will conclude an alliance with Tito. . . ."

My friend smoked another American cigarette, drank his small cup of Turkish coffee, raised his clenched fist in Communist salute and disappeared in the sunshine that pervaded the street outside the dark cafe.

Don't Forget to Throw Back Those Little 69-Ft. Blue Whales

By Arthur Edson
Associated Press Reporter

Your Government thinks of everything. Yesterday, for example, it came up with the latest information on how—or, rather, how not—to catch a whale.

So, avast there, whale lovers!

Readers of "Moby Dick" will recall that the main requirements for a whaling trip are: (a) a harpoon, (b) some good cuss words, and (c) a high sense of adventure.

But don't get too hasty. A Department of Commerce bulletin points out another necessary ingredient: a tape measure.

Pull up a statistic while we talk this thing over.

Let us assume you catch a humpback whale. Don't start reeling him in. Mercy, no! Ask him to hold still while you measure him.

For international rules, says the Commerce Department, proclaim that if he's less than 35 feet, he's only a minnow. He must be thrown back.

How does one persuade a whale to hold still for measuring purposes? The Commerce people don't say. But probably it's best to reason with him. Point out that, after all, if he's less than 35 feet long, it's to his advantage to be measured.

Okay, this chore is finished, and on we go.

A blue whale is the next catch. He finally is convinced he should hold still. Turns out he's 69 feet 11½ inches long.

Back in he goes. The rules say 70 feet.

One other tip is all we need. Caught whales must be out of the water within 33 hours, and there's a mighty good reason why.

"Whale carcasses," the report delicately explains, "deteriorate rapidly."

Helicopters May Carry Mail

The Civil Aeronautics Board yesterday opened the air mail and freight field to helicopters on an experimental basis, authorizing use of the wingless craft as mail carriers on three shuttle routes between the Los Angeles Municipal Airport and 30 nearby postoffices.

The first helicopter mail-operating certificate in American aviation history was issued to Los Angeles Airways, Inc., which will use the "flying windmills" to speed up air-mail deliveries from the airport to the postoffices—all located within a 50-mile radius of the center of Los Angeles.

Mail-truck deliveries at present are hampered by surface traffic congestion in the Los Angeles area. The CAB said that use of the helicopters will get air mail to its destination anywhere from 4½ to 19 hours faster on weekdays and as much as 24 hours faster on weekends and holidays.

The operating certificate will run only for three years, CAB said.

Fingerprint Bill Approved

By the United Press

The House, in its first legislative crackdown on Communists and other subversives, yesterday passed a bill authorizing the State Department to fingerprint all applicants for United States passports.

The measure now goes to the Senate. It was passed unanimously after Representative Karl E. Mundt (R., S. Dak.), its author, said it was designed to prevent Communist and other dissident elements from obtaining fraudulent passports.

Mundt, a member of the House Un-American Activities Committee, said the necessity for such a measure "became clear" during the committee's investigation of German-born Gerhart Eisler, alleged boss of the United States Communists.

Eisler was accused of illegally obtaining a passport by using the picture of another man. He has since been indicted on the charge.

Mundt said the authority to compel fingerprinting of passport applicants is made "discretionary."

Another 153 letters arrived at Children's Hospital yesterday, bringing in 882 more Capital Transit streetcar tokens and $22.97 in cash.

To date, the institution has received 4026 letters since The Post's District Line column suggested that invalidated tokens be contributed to the hospital.

The letters contained 19,554 tokens and $362.06 in cash. The tokens were redeemed by Capital Transit for $1609.50.

Political Theory Causes Rift Between Democratic Bigwigs

By Drew Pearson

IT ISN'T advertised outside the inner circle but there's a wide political rift between most members of the Truman Cabinet and those who guide Democratic National Headquarters..

Democratic politicos led by Bob Hannegan, Gael Sullivan, Ed Flynn and various other big-city bosses believe Truman should stick diligently to the old Roosevelt left-of-center policy.

But a majority of the Cabinet—led by Secretary of the Treasury Snyder—disagree. They are middle-of-the-roaders.

Illustrating the rift was a private conversation in Miami recently between Bob Hannegan and Assistant Secretary of War Stuart Symington—both Democrats, both from St. Louis.

Symington suggested that Democratic Director Sullivan was being a little rough on big business by demanding heavy price cuts. To this, Hannegan replied:

"Stew, are you one of those so-and-so's who believe Truman can win by appeasing the Big Business boys? If they're for us, we're licked. The thing that worries me most is that 75 per cent of the press is for Truman. Unless 75 per cent of the papers think we're too liberal, the people will think we're too conservative. The Republicans always win in that kind of a setup."

Symington started to protest that he wasn't a reactionary, but Hannegan continued:

"The reason we Democrats win is that the people know we're the friend of the little man—that we protect his job and his home, his health and his future. Unless he feels that about Truman, we're licked."

U. S.-Made Dictators

ON ALMOST the same day President Truman sent his message to Congress proposing United States arms for Pan American countries, a Latin American dictator was demonstrating what happens when Pan Americans get United States arms.

The dictator in question was Gen. Anastasio Somoza of Nicaragua, who deserves to have the trademark "Made in America" stamped on his expansive bosom, but who, nevertheless, is just as much a dictator as Hitler or Mussolini.

Somoza's background and the revolution he kicked up last week are important. They illustrate one of the great dangers in the Truman "Arms-for-Latin-America" program.

Back in 1927 when the Coolidge Adminstration got into hot water in Nicaragua, Henry L. Stimson was sent down to patch up the trouble and worked out a deal whereby the United States Marines trained the Nicaraguan National Guard.

The Marines did an excellent job. They not only trained the national guard, but they picked Somoza to head the guard, and they trained him so well that Somoza has been ruling Nicaragua ever since.

Somoza was picked because he was supposed to be friendly to the U. S. A. He once sold automobiles in Philadelphia and New York, and his uncle, a candidate for President, was a Philadelphia dentist.

However, Somoza turned out to be pro-Somoza and nothing else. He was not even pro-Nicaraguan. After the first free elections were held in Nicaragua, Somoza, with the marine-trained national guard behind him, kicked out his uncle as President and became President himself. He has been running the country ever since.

Nicaraguan Nepotism

LAST MONTH, however, he installed another President, Dr. Leonardo Arguello, generally considered a Somoza puppet.

President Arguello, however, surprised folks—though not for long. He had the nerve to demote Somoza's son-in-law, Louis de Bayle, a colonel in the national guard and head of public health. He also relieved Somoza's elder son as inspector general of the national guard and transferred him to the Leon garrison—away from the capital. Another of Somoza's sons was relieved as commander of the presidential guard.

Finally—and the straw that broke the camel's back—the new President started to oust Somoza's son-in-law, Bill Seville-Sacasa, as Ambassador to the United States. Somoza's daughter, Lillian, is Nicaraguan Ambassadress in Washington and enjoys the bright life. This move could not be tolerated.

So last week, new President Arguello found himself looking for a country of exile. He was replaced with Benjamin Lacayo-Sacasa, a second cousin of Dictator Somoza.

While this tale of Nicaraguan revolution has its humorous aspects, actually it is a tragedy. Somoza is one of the most hated men in Nicaragua, but he can't be turned out. American arms and training under American Marines have made him all-powerful. The people of Nicaragua can vote till they are black-and-blue in the face, but they have to put up with the American-made dictator.

However, Secretary Marshall and his War Department friends have persuaded President Truman to support a plan for sending more arms and more United States military men to train Pan-American armies. This is sure to mean more dictators. It also means contact between government and government, when what we need is contact between people and people. The more Latin American peoples resent a dictator, the more they dislike the country which helped create that dictator; also, the more they veer toward communism.

If the same money were spent for the exchange of students and professors instead of arms, it would do twice as much to ward off communism—and also build genuine friendship.

6-Million Airport Opened by Panama

Panama, Panama, June 2 (AP).—Panama's new multi-million-dollar airport was officially opened to international traffic a year ahead of schedule with the arrival of three Peruvian International Airways planes.

Enrique A. Jimenez, President of the republic, read a proclamation opening the airport.

Cost of the airport was estimated at between six and seven million dollars.

Farben Output Seen Fourth of Prewar

Frankfurt, Germany, June 2 (U.P.).—American authorities say the plants of the former I. G. Farben Industrie cartel would produce only 25 per cent of their prewar capacity in the "foreseeable future."

James A. Chance, chief of United States Military Government's economic division, said 72 Farben units in the American zone were damaged and some were totally destroyed in the war.

There are about 260 Farben units under American control and 60 are operating under MG trusteeship.

All trustees, administrators, executives and most workers were found to be free of Nazi affiliation before they were allowed to go to work.

Grants of $532,000 Aid Medical Research

New York, June 2 (AP).—The John and Mary R. Markle Foundation announced it granted $532,000 in the past year, chiefly for 139 medical researches in colleges, universities and hospitals of the United States and Canada.

Several of these were on the mysteries of getting old. X-rays were used at Dalhousie University, Halifax, to study the changes on bones that go with aging.

The Southwestern Medical College at Dallas and Baylor University found some changes in animal white blood cells during senility. The School of Medicine at Washington University, St. Louis, studied aging skin and found some quite unexpected alterations in structure.

6500 Sq. Mi. of Locusts

Guatemala, June 2 (AP).—The Guatemalan Ministry of Agriculture announced today that a swarm of locusts was extending over more than 6500 square miles of El Salvador, two-fifths of the country, and menacing the Guatemalan frontier. This is the same locust plague which moved across Costa Rica, Nicaragua and a corner of Honduras about six months ago.

215 to Attend D. C. Bankers' 4-Day Parley

By S. Oliver Goodman

Upward of 215 bankers, their wives and guests will gather at Bedford Springs, Pa., tomorrow afternoon for the twenty-ninth annual convention of the District of Columbia Bankers Association.

The four-day session will get under way Thursday with the annual address of S. William Miller, association president. Other highlights of the opening day will include addresses by Aubrey G. Lanston, vice president of First Boston Corp., on "Debt Management and Banks," and by Constantine Brown, newspaper foreign editor, on "Can America Buy World Peace."

Friday's session will include talks by Curtis R. Holton, industrial relations consultant, on "Importance of Personnel Administration," and C. A. Sienkiewicz, vice president of Federal Reserve Bank of Philadelphia, on "Banking Perspective and Guides."

Saturday will see election of officers, an address by Emil Schram, president of New York Stock Exchange, and the "Family Dinner."

In between business sessions the bankers will be occupied with a golf contest, sightseeing and social events. This is the first time the convention is being held at Bedford Springs, about 137 miles from Washington. Previous conventions have been held in Hot Springs, Va.; White Sulphur Springs, W. Va.; Deer Park, Md.; Virginia Beach and Montauck Point, N. Y.

About 70 wives will attend the meeting this year, it was indicated.

Richard A. Norris of the Lincoln National Bank, is expected to be the next association president.

Beer Supply Plentiful Here

Beer drinkers face a plentiful supply here this summer in contrast with last year's summer drought, a spokesman for the Christian Heurich Brewing Co. said yesterday. The current price of 10 cents for a 12-ounce bottle will remain unchanged for off-premise sales, he predicted.

His comments followed a report that beer prices in New York City will be reduced from 12 cents to 10 cents a 12-ounce bottle, effective today.

PCA Plans Refinancing

C. Bedell Monroe, president of Pennsylvania Central Airlines Corp., announced yesterday the filing with the Securities and Exchange Commission of a refinancing program under which, as a first step, payment of the airlines' four-million-dollar bank loans is extended three years.

Monroe said the company, which operates the Capital Airlines, will ask holders of its 10-million-dollar debentures to consent to waive the sinking fund installment for three years and to permit other changes.

He said the program will also provide an additional $1,750,000 of working capital and make possible the purchase of new aircraft.

25 to Attend Rutgers

Twenty-five Washington bankers will attend the Graduate School of Banking at Rutgers University in New Jersey from June 16 to 28. The school, conducted by the American Bankers Association, offers bankers of officer rank advanced study in banking, economics, law, government and philosophy.

Attending from this city will be Bernard L. Amiss, Kenneth Birgfeld, Frederick J. Burrell, Luis F. Corea, William J. De Jarnette, Lynn O. De Lashmutt, Harry L. Downey, Carl E. Dunnington, George B. Earnshaw, Peyton B. Fletcher, jr., John C. Franzoni, Harry N. Glascoe, Allen A. Greenstreet, Kenneth A. Kenyon, Donald A. McCormack, John C. McCormack, Donald W. Mowbray, Louis C. Paladini, Fred M. Perley, George M. Rowzee, jr., Paul Vrundy, Thomas E. Whinery, Tudor Whiton, Darrell E. Wilkins and James F. Willott.

Bankers Disagree on Plan

Bankers disagreed yesterday over the merits of proposed legislation to regulate and control bank holding companies.

Hilary C. Huntington, jr., president of the Morris Plan Corp. of America, assailed it as "a concealed but deliberate effort to extend the power of the Federal Reserve Board to State banks which have elected not to be members of the Federal Reserve System."

But Robert S. Beasley, president of the Independent Bankers Association of the Twelfth Federal Reserve District, argued before the Senate Banking Committee that the legislation is "vital to sound banking, to the maintenance of free credit and to free enterprise."

Two Delegates Named

Two Washington delegates have been named to the annual convention of the United States Savings and Loan League. They are Rudolph W. Santelmann, secretary of Metropolis Building Association, and Edward L. McAleer, secretary of Equitable Cooperative. The session will be held September 15-20 in San Francisco.

Personnel Notes

American Airlines announced the appointment of R. W. Williams as Washington district cargo sales representative, succeeding A. M. Hage who was named cargo representative in Newark.

James A. Wooten, former American Airlines contract cargo general manager, has been elected president of Alaskan Airlines, effective July 1.

T. W. Robey has been appointed chief of research and planning for Seaboard Airline Railroad.

William E. Carpenter, former Office of Defense Transportation chief of traffic analysis, has established offices here as a specialist in motor carrier traffic and cost analyses.

Senate to Investigate Truman Nominations For Postmasterships, Senator Taft Predicts

By The Associated Press

Senator Taft said yesterday a Senate committee will comb "the sheep from the goats" among some 800 postmaster appointments for whom President Truman seeks Senate confirmation.

The nominations have been accumulating without action since the Republican-controlled Congress organized.

After a meeting of the Republican policy committee, Taft predicted to reporters the Senate will vote an investigation of the appointees.

Taft said Chairman Langer (R., N. Dak.) expects to obtain final approval by the Civil Service Committee today of a resolution making $35,000 available for an inquiry.

Led by Senators Lucas (D., Ill.) and Tydings (D., Md.), Democrats have been demanding that the Senate pass on the appointments.

Taft said that if the investigation discloses cases of defects in Civil Service procedure the Senate may reject the appointments involved.

Asked whether the Republican majority is going to insist upon the appointment of GOP party members where it can, Taft shook his head in the negative.

MRS. HELEN C. ELWELL, of East Hebron, N. The church's annual meeting was the largest in years, drawing attendance from many parts of the world

Landis Tells Of Air Crashes

terday in the House by Representative Ross (R., N. Y.). He said the CAB and CAA were guilty of "gross negligence, irresponsible administration and dereliction of duty."

Makes Personal Inquiry

"A personal probe of the Port Deposit tragedy has convinced me that an investigation will substantiate my findings," he added.

Congress plans to make just such an investigation, it appeared. After Ross' remarks, including a demand for a "gloves off" probe, Chairman Wolverton (R., N. J.) of the House Commerce Committee announced that a subcommittee would sit with the CAB as it conducts its further investigations. The group will be headed by Representative Hinshaw (R., Calif.).

Across the Capitol, the Senate also plans to dig into the subject. Chairman Brewster (R., Me.) of a Commerce Subcommittee which held hearings on air crashes several months ago, announced his group was considering reopening the investigation shortly.

Earlier, a Senate Appropriations Subcommittee heard Commerce Secretary Harriman warn that air accidents would increase if the Senate concurred in House-approved appropriations cutting 70 million dollars from CAA funds. It would "more than slice in half" CAA's program for installing safety devices, he said.

Harriman declared air travel is eight times more hazardous than the railroad or bus travel. He said that while air accidents cannot be entirely eliminated, the "important consideration" is that those crashes can be reduced. The method to accomplish this is to install "new and proven (safety) devices."

In reply to Harriman, the Air Transport Association said later that, on the basis of Government figures, there were 2.4 fatalities for every 100 million passenger miles traveled on railroads in 1945, and 2.5 fatalities on the commercial airlines.

In the three-year period from 1943 to 1945, ATA said, there were 2.5 fatalities for the railroads and only 2.4 for the airlines.

Harriman's remarks came in the course of protests to the Senate subcommittee against a 33 per cent House cut in the 287 million dollar Commerce Department appropriation.

"With the increase in traffic, larger planes and higher speeds, air accidents are likely to increase unless improved facilities are installed," he said.

At a press conference, Landis summarized the information known to date on the two Memorial weekend crashes. He gave this picture of the Port Deposit tragedy:

The plane was a converted C-54 B, used only 800 hours in military service, and entered into civilian service in September, 1946. It had just been through a routine "3000-hour check" and overhaul at Miami, and had flown to Newark, N. J.

Taking off from Newark on the return trip, it reported its flight as routine and normal over Philadelphia. The weather was excellent and there was no evidence of turbulence.

It was flying southwest at about 4000 feet when, ground observers reported, it went into a dive. It landed heading east, having taken a turn of more than a right angle. In the dive it went into an inverted position, i. e. upside down, and hit at a plunge angle of 45 degrees.

Landis said witnesses agreed on the fact that pieces of the tail assembly fell or were torn off the plane. They disagreed, however, as to when—whether before the dive, during the dive, or after the plane turned over in the air.

He said all the propellors and engines had been accounted for and none showed any "obvious" defects. Those pieces of equipment, as well as evidence to be obtained from witnesses, will be the object of a detailed investigation.

Of the LaGuardia Field crash, Landis disclosed that the pilot had chosen to take off on a short—3500 foot—runway, although the control tower had suggested use of a longer strip, of 6000 feet. The pilot made his choice, which was his right, on the grounds that the shorter runway headed more directly into the wind.

A thundersquall, with its threat of shifting winds, had been called to the attention of all planes on the field, Landis said. It struck—or at least the change of wind occurred—while the plane was midway down the strip. The wind had been coming from the south and suddenly struck from the northwest.

Landis said he believed that the subsequent fire in the plane was caused by its striking a parkway lamppost.

This Morning

—With Shirley Povich

THE HOTTEST ARTICLE in the golf trade at this time is a well-stacked, 180-pound Britisher by the name of Bobby Locke who is 29 years old, looks 35, plays in plus fours, tips his cap when the gallery applauds one of his shots, and may be the best golfer in the world.

POVICH

And the luckiest tournament committee in the land are the gentlemen of the Prince Georges Country Club who have the amazing Mr. Locke already packaged for delivery to the field that will tee off on Thursday in the $10,000 National Capitol Open Tournament. Among tournament drawing-cards, he is now something scrumptious.

Ever since April, Locke has set the American golf world on its collective ear, and aroused Britain to a frenzy of admiration in the wake of his American conquests. By birth he's a South African, and plays most of his golf in Johannesburg, but he's Empire property now, and Reuters' correspondents have been shuttling between the United Nations sessions and the United States country clubs to record the stroke-by-stroke play of the fellow's triumphs.

With his old-country swing and scorn for American style of play, he beat Hogan and Demaret in the Houston Open, won the Carolina P. G. A. by eight strokes, copped first prize in the $15,000 Philadelphia Inquirer tournament, and the other day finished on top in the tremendous test offered by the Goodall Invitation.

NOTHING LIKE LOCKE ever hit the tight monopoly of the American pros. Now it's more understandable how come he beat Sam Snead 14 times in head-to-head matches on a South African tour last June. The United States pros were skeptical when the cables relayed the continuing successes of Locke against Snead, tracing Snead's defeats to his known putting weaknesses, but that was before they saw Locke in action.

In the 25 tournament rounds Locke has played in the United States, he has knocked 41 strokes off par for an average of 69.8 per 18 holes, and walked away with $8370 in prize money. But back in 1937, the two old barnstormers, Walter Hagen and Joe Kirkwood, were impressed with Locke on a tour they were making through South Africa.

Locke was an amateur then. Both Hagen and Kirkwod were so smitten with him they advised him to turn pro; told him he was wasting his time as a $15.00 per week clerk and foregoing the big money he could win as a pro. He quit the amateurs in 1938, but before he was squared away on a pro career, World War II put in a bid for him and he was five years in the British armed forces before finishing second to Snead in last year's British Open.

LOCKE'S VISIT to the United States was somewhat clouded by the last experience of a British golfer here. Dick Burton, the British Open champion of 1945, came to New York for a special match with Byron Nelson and had his ears pinned back properly. It was no contest. Thus Locke was regarded as just another British golfer, over his head in American company. But the difference was that Dick Burton was something of a fluke champion of England, much as was Sam Parks when he won the 1935 United States Open, and never won anything else.

If Locke has a weakness, it's not apparent, yet. The United States pros have said that he has no fade to his ball, the technique that cuts the roll from the iron shot to the pin, and that on the "tight" courses he will have his troubles. But on the tricked-up greens of the Philadelphia tournament, Locke encountered no trouble, and as Clark (Specs) Hammond, the P. G. A. tournament supervisor says:

"If Locke lacks a fade on his shots to the green, it doesn't hurt him much, because his accuracy on the fairways always gives him a good shot to the green. We don't know yet how good a recovery shot artist Locke is but that's explainable because we've never seen him in trouble yet. He's the most remarkably accurate golfer in the world. You can say that right now. In the 72 holes at Philadelphia, he was off the fairway just three times."

NOBODY AMONG the elite of American golf swings a club like Locke. He hews to the old-country's "inside-out" swing in contrast to the American pro who takes his club straight back and straight through. Locke's is the low and wide sweeping, methodical backswing that contains a bit of a loop both of the hands and the elbows—frowned upon by American stylists—but he corrects it before lashing into the ball.

It's the old Scotch swing practiced by the foreign-born American pros of another generation, MacDonald Smith, Bob MacDonald, et al., and something to restore faith in the technique of those old masters. It gets Locke distance that compares with any of our pros, and he spits into the eye of the trends, too, by using the longer-headed British wooden clubs and deeper-faced irons of the old country.

If Locke doesn't win another United States tournament, he's already made his influence felt on American golf. He's got some of the United States pros tipping their caps and otherwise acknowledging the applause of the galleries. I think that's a whopping contribution to what has been the stony-faced calm of the golfing robots.

Boston Wins First, Loses 2d to Chisox

Chicago, June 2 (AP).—The Chicago White Sox, after losing the opener, 6-2, scored two runs on a force play today to win the second game of a double-header from Boston, 5-5, to end a five-game losing streak.

The freak play developed in the fifth inning. Thurman Tucker walked with one out. Jack Wallaesa's second double advanced Tucker to third base. Dave Philley was purposely passed by Harry Dorish, filling the bases.

Murrell Jones was the first batter Johnny Murphy faced. He hit to Johnny Pesky, who threw to Don Gutteridge, covering second, for a force play of Philley. The Chicago rookie slid in hard and put a football block on Gutteridge, grounding the Boston infielder as Tucker and Wallaesa hurried home.

The Sox nicked four Boston hurlers for six hits.

St. Louis, June 2 (AP).—The Philadelphia Athletics mixed timely hitting with Cliff Fannin's wildness to take a 6-to-3 decision from the last place Browns tonight, thus getting an even break in the two-game series.

Fine relief pitching by Bob Savage held the Browns at bay after Rookie Bill McCahan was Ko-ed in the fifth inning.

Ahearn Peers at Slim Sales, Sunny Skies, Postpones Fight

By Morris Siegel
Post Reporter

PROMOTER Goldie Ahearn of the Liberty A. C. took a long look at the almost bare financial cupboard for the Lew Hanbury-Biff Jones fight card last night, squinted at the sun and then quickly muttered that the show would be postponed until tonight on account of threatening weather.

The District Boxing Commission, on hand to perform at the 2 p. m. weigh-in ceremonies, debated for a full 45 seconds and granted the delay.

There wasn't a cloud in the sky when the announcement was made at 2:30 p. m. but Ahearn evidently saw storm warnings in the strongbox and decided to take the weatherman's prediction for scattered showers last night.

Ahearn didn't jump the gun that quick on May 5 when afternoon rain threatened his Smuggy Hursey-Aaron Perry fight at the ball park. There was a good chunk in the till and the Liberty A. C. group waited until 5:30 before announcing that the fight would go on.

All the fighters were at the commission office for the weigh-in and the main event boys, Jones, Hanbury, Sandy Saddler and Jimmy Carter had even been "briefed" by the commission when it was decided to stage the Griffith Stadium party tonight instead of last night.

Hanbury made 135, Jones 131½, Saddler, the No. 2 ranking featherweight, hit an even 130, while Carter, whom he meets in the other cofeatured ten, was two and a half pounds heavier.

Sonny Boy West, local featherweight, and clever little Mickey Garcia, a Puerto Rican importation, meet in a special six. Two fours round out the card.

THE UMBRELLA IS JUST FOR EFFECT—Sandy Saddler, center, holds the umbrella for Lew Hanbury, left, and Biff Jones to shield them from the sun. The trio indulged in a little horseplay when they learned that the fight card on which they were scheduled to appear last night had been postponed because of threatening weather. The announcement was made at 2:30, six hours before the fight when there wasn't a cloud in the sky

Baltimore Ace Has 64 To Set Mark

Special to The Washington Post

Baltimore, June 2.—Otto Greiner, 27-year-old Baltimorean who turned pro this spring, set a new course record in the final 18 holes today to win the medal in the sectional qualifying round for the National Open golf tourney at the Country Club of Maryland.

Greiner, 1946 Maryland amateur champ last ye r, came in with a 36-hole five-under par total of 135.

Bassler's 142 Is Next

After a morning round of 71, which left him three strokes behind Charley Bassler, Chevy Chase pro, Grainer fired two 32's in the afternoon to break his own competitive course record of 66 and wind up seven strokes ahead of Bassler. Bassler's total was 68-74—142.

Third was George Payton of Hampton, Va., with a 71-72—143 card, followed by John O'Donnell of Norfolk, Va., 75-70—145, and Walter Romans, Baltimore, 70-77—147.

Romans and Andy Gibson, the home course pro, tied for the fifth spot, but in the playoff Romans won with a par four on the first extra hole, Gibson taking a five.

No amateur finished in the top five, but Ed Finnessy of Mount Pleasant managed to qualify as an alternate with a 148. Gibson and Tommy Wright of Knoxville, Tenn., both pros, also qualified as alternates.

Started With Two Bogies

Greiner had morning rounds of 36, 35, but scorched his home course after lunch with a pair of sizzling 32s. Greiner's afternoon card showed six birdies and a dozen pars.

He started out sloppily in the morning with bogie fives on the first two holes, got a birdie four on the fourth and matched the card for the rest of the nine. Coming in, he birdied 11 and 12 after parring the tenth, bogied the next two holes and matched par the rest of the way.

Greiner's card:

	MORNING	ROUND
Par out	444 534 434—35
Greiner out	554 434 434—36
Par in	444 345 434—35—70
Greiner in	53 455 434—35—71
	AFTERNOON	ROUND
Greiner out	443 433 434—32
Greiner in	343 344 434—32	64 71—135

ON OTHER COURSES: Two district qualifying rounds were postponed. At Canton, Ohio, the course was unfit for play because of bad weather and the elimination was postponed to Wednesday while at St. Louis a mixup over teeing up in the fairways on two wet courses forced a reply of the entire two rounds after nearly all the field was in. The St. Louis qualifying round will be played over tomorrow.

In New York, Bobby Locke, who got lost getting out to the Long Island links from the city this morning and arrived late to start play, ran into more trouble this afternoon. Apparently unaware of the United States Golf Association ruling against cleaning the ball, the 29-year-old Johannesburg golfer had been constantly resorting to this practice. The officials announced that Locke's score would be allowed since violation of the ruling had been widespread among the golfers competing today.

In Philadelphia, big Ed Dudley, PGA president, provided the drama with his determined drive

Buck Worsham Makes It; Locke Edges In

There'll be two Worshams of Washington in the National Open golf championships at St. Louis this month.

Lew, an automatic qualifier, will be joined by his younger brother, Buck, assistant pro at Winged Post. Buck had a 71, 74—145, three over par, on the Cherry Valley course at Garden City.

In the same field, Bobby Locke, 4recent Goodall winner, slipped in with a pair of 73s.

Old Man Rain Does It To Nats Again

By Al Costello
Post Reporter

Detroit, June 2.—The Nats today again ran second to another all day rain that completely washed out their scheduled double header with the Detroit Tigers.

Grumbling at the ill luck that has allowed them to play only one game in five days on two visits here thus far, and fidgeting from the inactivity, the Nats tonight departed for Cleveland, where the Indians will be met in night games tomorrow and Wednesday and a single game Thursday afternoon.

Today's postponement marked the fifteenth time this season that games have been called off due to weather. Twenty games are involved.

Most disappointed of the Nats was Ray Scarborough, who was to have had his first starting chance of the season today, after four straight impressive relief stints, in one of the two washed out games.

With his entire staff chafing at the bit and anxious for some badly needed work, Manager Ossie Bluege has revised hurling plans, for the time being, at least. Scarborough is being temporarily sidetracked and tomorrow night's call will go to Bobo Newsom, who also was due to work today.

Wednesday's night game will probably be entrusted to Early Wynn, who like Newsom, isn't getting enough work.

Sid Hudson, who showed his torn side muscle is completely well after hurling four and two thirds innings of splendid ball against the Boston Red Sox Decoration Day, undoubtedly will get the call Thursday in the afternoon tilt with the Indians.

Today's double bill was not called off until a few minutes before the scheduled 1:30 p. m. starting time despite the all-day deluge that showed no signs of stopping. Yesterday, under virtually the same conditions, the Tiger bosses did not call things off until 2:30 p. m.

McLeod Enters Capital Open

Columbia Country Club's veteran pro, Freddie McLeod, 1908 National Open Champion, has entered the $10,000 National Capital Open which starts Thursday at Prince Georges.

It marks the first time in many years that McLeod will participate in a real competitive tourney, although he played The Post's National Celebrities show on his home course last month.

played in The Post's National Celebrities show on his home course last month.

"I think it's great that Fred will play in our show," Host Pro Al Houghton said last night. "He's a grand little fellow and bangs that ball around surprisingly well for his years."

Most of the players in the fast field weren't even born when Freddie captured the National Open.

Houghton also announced that only the 60 low pros and 10 low amateurs will qualify for the final 36 holes, Saturday and Sunday.

The field will battle for 20 prizes, topped by $2,000 first money. Pairing will be made this afternoon at Prince Georges.

Something new in the way of mat holds will be offered on tomorrow night's wrestling show at Turner's Arena when Prince Emir Badui, 'the barefooted, mustachioed, Saudi Arabia grappler, tangles with Frank (Powerhouse) Sexton, the champion, in a title bout.

Badui said he will turn loose his Arabian deathlock which is described as a combination of Nanjo Singh's cobra clutch, Ed (Strangler) Lewis' headlock, Joe Savoldi's dropkick, Gus Sonnenberg's flying tackle and Jim Londos' airplane spin.

The prince also says he can make faces like the Angel and grunt like "Ginger," the wrestling bear. But can he wrestle?

Pollet Stars As Cards Win

New York, June 2 (AP).—Howie Pollett outlasted five Dodger pitchers and also drove in the winning run with a tenth inning single as the Cardinals beat the Dodgers, 5 to 4, today to even the two-game series.

Enos Slaughter opened the tenth against Ralph Branca with a single, was sacrificed to second by Terry Moore, and after Del Wilber was purposely passed, Pollet cracked a single to score Slaughter. Pollet also started the three-run fifth for the Cardinals with a single as starter Joe Hatten was knocked out.

Gannon, Stribling Get Bout Approval

Joe Gannon and Ken Stribling will meet at Griffith Stadium Monday night, following approval of their 10-round bout by the District Boxing Commission yesterday.

Both boys have given up the idea of fighting in the heavier classes, and both will concentrate on the middleweight division in the future.

Hartung Loses To Reds, 9-3

New York, June 2 (AP).—The Cincinnati Reds knocked the New York Giants out of sole possession of the National League lead and handed previously unbeaten Clint Hartung his first setback of the season today by crushing the New Yorkers, 9-3.

The defeat dropped the Giants into a tie for first place with the idle Chicago Cubs.

Hartung, a converted outfielder who boasted a 4-0 record prior to the game, was slugged for 12 hits including eighth inning homers by Eddie Lukon and Eddie Miller. Besides getting his eleventh four-bagger of the year Miller drove in four runs.

The eighth inning uprising broke a 2-2 deadlock and the Reds salted the game away by scoring four more runs in the final inning against Hartung and Hub Andrews. Bucky Walters went the route for the Reds, allowing 11 safeties for his 193d major league victory.

After the Reds had taken a 2-0 lead in the first four innings, Hartung put the Giants back into the game by bouncing his first home run of the season off the left field score board.

Letter Men Strut

Athletes Have 'Day' At Navy

Annapolis, Md., June 2 (AP).—This was the day for athletes at the Naval Academy.

Winners of the coveted "N" for excellence in Navy's broad sports program were the heroes of this third day of June week. They received their letters—297 in all—from Rear Admiral James L. Holloway, jr., their superintendant, in an evening formation at Tecumseh Court.

Then they assembled at Hubbard Hall, the field stone Academy boat house on the edge of winding Dorsey Creek, for the toniest of pre-graduation parties, the "N" dance.

Only letter-winners and their sweethearts could attend. The conspicuous gold "N" each varsity athlete sported in his sweater was the only entree for the evening's crowning social event.

Tables were placed on floats by the dock and strings of Chinese lanterns hung overhead to throw a subdued light on the gathering.

One of the proudest Middies there was Kenny Shugart, captain of the basketball team and one of the Academy's all-time court greats. Not only had he won the Thompson Trophy for having done the most to promote sports, but his "drag" was Miss Dorothy McKay, pretty brunette who will be "Miss Wyoming" in the Atlantic City beauty pagent this summer. Both hail from Cheyenne.

Jim Carrington of Riverside, Conn., the football, swimming and lacrosse star who got the Navy Athletic Association prize for all-around excellence, was there, and so was Art Bigley, the Butte, Mont., fleet-foot whose track exploits earned him a special tribute for individual prowess.

Many of the athletes had the cherished star in their letters that signified a victory over Army. Nine teams turned the trick in the past year.

All except the boxing insignia were for intercollegiate competition. The ringmen were brigade champions in nine weight classes. But Navy does not schedule outside opponents in the sport.

Bit of Nerve Runs Second, Louis L 3d

By Walter Haight
Post Reporter

Charles Town, W. Va., June 2.—Jockey Sammy Palumbo, after riding seven seconds, finally got into the winner's circle in the Yankee Lad Purse, featuring the Monday program here.

Palumbo, the "king of smaller track jockeys," was aboard William Rottluff's Sunday Knight and the 4-year-old came through with a smashing two-length victory.

In second position came J. H. Vanwert's Bit of Nerve, while third money went to H. E. Moore's Louis L. A field of seven competed and the crowd of 6500 installed Sunday Knight as odds-on favorite, and those who collected did so at the rate of $3.20 for each $2 investment.

Ten-Minute Delay

There was much confusion before the race and for a while it looked like it would be run next Sunday night. Most of the 10-minute delay was caused by Sweet Barbara, who probably will be known in the future as Sour Barbara. She was so fractious that she finally broke her equipment and was scratched.

Sunday Knight was allowed to run easily in the opening stages while saving ground. Bit of Nerve and Louis L. vied for the pace-making honors with the former drawing out.

Approaching the stretch, Palumbo sent Sunday Knight through on the inside, bumping Louis L, as he did so. Sunday Knight then disposed of Bit of Nerve and was opening a gap at end.

Sunday Knight, second to Annie's Dream in his first outing here, was clocked in 1:17 for the 6 furlongs, plus 120 feet, over a fast track.

Nertney Rides Winner

Jockey Willie Nertney, who resumed a riding career after being away with the Armed Forces for upward of four years, rode his third winner in four tries and his second for the day in the seventh race.

Nertney with C. Bucalo's Merry Elgin under him, survived a three-way photo finish to take chief money. Beaten a nose was Mrs. H. R. Miller's Mor Lady with W. M. Richardson's Electric also trying to get his nose in the main part of the picture.

Merry Elgin paid $6.40 and was clocked in 1:28 for the about 7 furlongs.

The daily double paid $46. Jockey Albert Vesselli won the opener with Come Eleven at $9.40 and Johnny Tommaro scored in the second with Foxler, a $3.80 favorite.

Can't Get Them Out, Feller Moans

CLEVELAND, June 2 (AP).—During the Cleveland Indians' spring training season there was much speculation by baseball writers and others close to the club as to who would pitch for the Indians after Bob Feller.

Lately that question has been revised to "who will relieve" Feller?"

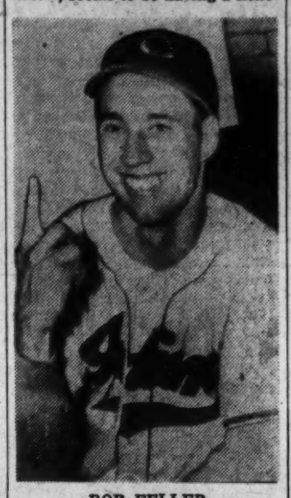
After dropping the season opener against the Chicago White Sox, the Tribe fireballer notched three straight shutouts. Then a recession occurred. Bob has failed to finish his last five starts and now has an undistinguished record of five wins and as many losses.

Bob's sudden decline followed publication of his book, "Strike-out Story," and caused some to suggest that the rigors of too many autograph parties in book stores had affected his pitching.

Feller discounted that theory quite effectively by tossing a one-hit shutout at the Boston Rex Sox the day after his most strenuous autograph party.

Coach Bill McKechnie, a keen student of pitching form and the man who has charge of the Tribe mound corps, isn't too perturbed.

"The young fellow, dontcha know, seems to be having a little trouble getting the ball over the plate," McKechnie commented.



BOB FELLER
. . . one out easy—Three Hard

HOWEVER, in his most recent start last Saturday against the New York Yankees, Feller didn't issue a single base on balls but the Yanks made eight hits off him in five innings. That circumstance makes it quite obvious that he was sacrificing speed and deception in an effort to recapture his control. He was aiming the ball instead of firing it as only Feller can.

For the first time in his career Feller became the target of the local boo birds in one of his recent losing appearances.

Feller himself fails to shed any light on his current slump.

"I just haven't been able to get anybody out, that's all. I certainly wish I knew the answer but I don't."

Feller has a way of confounding his critics and this isn't the first time there has been speculation over his pitching prowess. Little more than a year ago, Bob responded to widely printed hints that he had lost his stuff by firing a no-hitter at the Yankees.

DEAR FOLKS: The stewards practically ended the riding of Jockey Joe Carroll for the meeting. They didn't like the way he performed on Spikery, the favorite that was beaten by Colored Boy in last Saturday's feature. Carroll was given a 20-day suspension for a "misjudged" ride but from where I sat, Spikery was second best. However, Carroll, either through choice or something did take the horse in on the rail in the deepest going. He did some rough riding in the next race on No Quota. An old gal showed her speed in the third race. She is Westing, a 10-year-old mare who was running for the first time since 1942. She has been on a breeding farm and has a 2-year-old that will race here named Westing's Rival. In addition, she has a 3-year-old colt on the farm. She always liked the four and one half furlongs at this track and won here in 1941. Mrs. W. E. Hayes claimed Ebony Moon out of today's fourth race for $800. Willie Billington, a 25-year-old Canadian boy, is proving popular with the fans here. He has ridden four winners. E. E. Rich of Washington, has purchased Wise Step from Mox Jeweler and C. D. Toothman will train. Earl Johnson of Washington, will condition Perijames for E. A. Criseful. Somebody sent me a postal card telling me about my winners last week. I don't check anymore. It's hard luck. See you on the rail . . . BILL.

3 Show Horses Found Poisoned

Portsmouth, Ohio, June 2 (AP).—Three show horses, valued at between $22,000 and $27,000, were found dead today in their stalls at Scioto County Fairgrounds and a veterinarian said they had been poisoned.

Nine horses owned by Dr. O. O. Burt of Londonderry in Ross County were stabled at the Fairgrounds, 12 miles north of Portsmouth, awaiting shipment to a show at Georgetown, Ohio, next week. Six of the horses were unharmed today.

Dr. Burt identified the dead animals as 4-year-old Cloud of Dust, who won 19 out of 22 events last year and was listed by the doctor as a "world famous walking horse;" Star Storm, 7-year-old who took 15 out of 25 events last year, and 4-year-old Victor Allen.

Out Fishing...

By Jack Bell

ST. PETERSBURG, FLA., June 2.—Knowing there is a considerable number of persons who come to Florida during the winter months not knowing what to expect in the way of fishing, my wife and I drove down here in company with Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence Westcott, Falls Church, to look over the fishing situation.

We arrived here at 5:30 p. m. Saturday in advance of the annual meeting of the Outdoor Writers Association of America to be held here June 3-9.

The facts given in this instance are more or less local but we hope a little later to cover a wider scope.

Rube Allyn of the St. Petersburg Times, the guiding light of some 200 fishing writers and wildlife artists, has arranged a most varied schedule of fishing for the writers and sightseeing trips for them and their wives.

BROADLY speaking there are three main areas of fishing: Inland black bass, big game fishing in Tampa Bay, and the Gulf.

Fishing Saturday and Sunday was marred by torrential rain, reminding us of the tropical storms in the Amazon Valley while there in 1942-43.

Saturday evening Col. Lewis Rock, Dayton, Ohio, publisher; Outdoor Writers Al Clark, Dayton Herald; Tommy Dee, South Bend Tribune, and Russell Orr, Dayton Journal, aboard the "Black Snowflake," went out into Tampa Bay for tarpon. A sudden storm disabled the craft and they spent a rough night drifting about Tampa Bay, arriving in the harbor about 6:30 a. m. under sail power made from two Boy Scout blankets.

Our experience fishing for bass on Lake Butler was no less eventful. Fishing with Larry Westcott, Joe Brooks, Baltimore; Henry Davis, Bridgeport, Conn., and Larry Swartz, Edwardsville, Ill., we caught bass small in size. However, we made a number of fly-rod converts from young cane pole fishermen who learned that their dads were giving them a bum steer.

COME ELEVEN, $9.40, $4.60, $3.40; QUENT REYNOLDS, $3.00, $2.40; LERNERETTE, $4.00.

COME ELEVEN was off alertly, finally shook off QUENT REYNOLDS and drew out to win easily. QUENT REYOLDS went to the front early but could not cope with COME ELEVEN in the late stages and was best of others. LERNERETTE came with good energy in closing stages. KAPTIME was off poorly and had no chance.

SECOND RACE—Charles Town Course. Purse, $800. For 3-year-olds and up; claiming. Start good. Off at 1:34½. Owner, J. G. Schorsch. Trained by M. Longaretas. Time, 1:19.

FOXLER, $3.80, $3.00, $2.80; SCOTTYS OWN, $7.00, $5.60; EBONY LAKE, $4.40.

FOXLER was hustled out of the gate and kept closest to OYSTER SHELLO's early pace, saved ground to shake off the leaders and drew out under hand ride through stretch. SCOTTYS OWN was off well but lacked early speed, saved ground and closed with good energy. EBONY LAKE raced between horses while in a good position and tired. MAROC moved up boldly and then weakened.

Two Wooden Bridges Over Reflecting Pool Doomed as PBA Starts Wrecking Eyesores

The two wooden bridges over the Reflecting Pool will not spoil the view of visitors at the Lincoln Memorial much longer.

Yesterday, workmen of the Public Buildings Administration began to erect scaffolding which they will use to pull down the easterly passageway.

After this bridge is down, they will bring down the westerly structure. The latter is more of an eyesore because it is nearer to the plaza in front of the Lincoln Memorial. Tourists again will be able to see the Washington Monument reflected in unbroken glory.

John I. Weeks, chief of the moving section of PBA, estimated it would take about two weeks to pull down the east ramp, connecting the Navy and Munitions Buildings on Constitution ave. with the temporary war structures on the south side of the pool.

The temporary buildings, designated as Tempo I, J, K, and L, and the bridges, sprang from the Navy space shortage shortly after Pearl Harbor. National Capital Parks wants the bridges down by midsummer.

The movement to tear down the ugly structures was boosted by H. Lee Lurie of New York, who called them a "fantastic desecration" in a letter to The Post. The PBA, having started to pull things down, is also going to get rid of the ramp over 17th st., connecting the main Navy Buildings on Constitution ave. with the Naval Reserve section. The Navy, apparently cautious about severing connections with the Reserve just yet, prefers to wait a little.

Reece Demands U. S. Probe Of Kansas City Vote Count

Carroll Reece, chairman of the Republican National Committee, called yesterday for "a ruthless investigation and relentless prosecution of any wrongdoers" in connetcion with alleged vote frauds in Kansas City.

Reece

"Recent developments in connection with the vote fraud cases in Kansas City constitute an embarrassment to the entire American people because of Mr. Truman"s close association (a dues-paying membership) with the Pendergast machine in that city, and his personal involvement in the Democratic primary which precipitated the present investigation. It is, naturally, humiliating that the Chief Executive of the Nation should be placed in such a position.

"In the circumstances, it would seem that the Administration's only proper course of action would be a ruthless investigation and relentless prosecution of any wrongdoers. Unless that course is followed, the people are certain to draw conclusions which will reflect no credit on the Administration."

71 Accused of Fraud

A grand jury in Kansas City has indicted 71 persons on vote fraud charges in connection with the primary. A Senate Jucidiary Subcommittee also is looking into allegations that Attorney General Tom C. Clark has failed to act on the alleged frauds.

Trial Continued

Kansas City, June 2 (AP).—The prosecution was granted a week's continuance today as defendants in the 81 State vote fraud indictments appeared for trial before Circuit Judge John F. Cook.

Prosecutor James Kimbrell hampered by the theft of evidence a county grand jury had assembled in returning indictments against 71 individuals, asked for the delay.

Judge Cook granted the request, and said that in view of the importance of the cases he would call a jury any time the prosecution and defense agreed on trial dates for individual defendants. This is scheduled to be the last week of jury trials in the Jackson County Circuit Courts until next fall.

The door of the vault at the City Election Board in the County Courthouse was blasted last Wednesday morning and three boxes containing evidence rifled by thieves. Carried away were ballots, poll books and tally sheets from 32 precincts.

Another development today in the fraud cases was the request of the Attorney General in Washington for testimony given before the county grand jury. The request was relayed through Sam Wear, U. S. District Attorney, who in turn called Kimbrell.

"I'll be delighted to supply it to you," Kimbrell said.

Justice to Get 'Gray Market' Steel Evidence

By The Associated Press

An attorney for the Senate Small Business Committee said yesterday evidence of forgery and other irregularities in a steel "gray market" will be turned over to the Department of Justice.

George Meredith, executive director of the committee staff, said the committee will leave any inquiry along that line to the Justice Department because "our search is for steel for the small businessman."

"The only reason we have questioned Karp and Kerschbaumer is because we thought there might have been some steel involved," Meredith said. "Apparently there wasn't."

50-Million-Dollar Transaction

He referred to Herbert M. Karp, Brooklyn attorney, and E. A. Kerschbaumer, Pittsburgh steel broker, both of whom are key figures in a 50-million-dollar transaction which fell through.

A letter figuring in the deal was described in testimony by handwriting experts as a forgery. Addressed to Kerschbaumer, it purportedly promised delivery of 248,000 tons of steel by the Firth-Sterling Steel and Carbide Corp. of McKeesport, Pa. The company disclaimed it, and Karp said it was handed him in a hotel by a man he had never seen before and hasn't seen since. Karp said he did not sign the letter and does not know who did.

The committee heard Karp testify last Thursday that he knows nothing about steel. He said his only connection with the case was as attorney for a New with Kerschbaumer in attempts to York firm which was associated obtain 248,000 tons of steel.

Hearings Resume Today

The committee will reopen hearings today. Meredith said it has not yet heard from Karp as to whether he wishes to submit additional testimony.

At the time of his appearance last week, he said he had not seen previous testimony linking him with the case. He was given an opportunity to study the transcript and was told he may testify again or submit depositions.

Mysterious Chain Of Death Claims Its Sixth Victim

Southport, England, June 2 (AP).—A mysterious chain of death that enmeshed Dr. Robert Clements and his four wives claimed a new victim today.

Three days ago Dr. Clements, 67, was found dying.

Today the pathologist who did an autopsy on Dr. Clement's fourth wife was found dead in his infirmary. The circumstances were unexplained and an immediate inquest was ordered.

The pathologist, Dr. James Houston, examined the body of the fourth Mrs. Clements last week after police halted her funeral. About that time Dr. Clements, a Southport physician, was found dying in the luxurious apartment from which Mrs. Clements, 47, was being buried.

By The Associated Press

Violent deaths claimed 504 lives in the Nation during the Memorial Day weekend of which 228 resulted from traffic accidents, a final tabulation showed today.

Sixty-one persons were drowned. The additional miscellaneous total of 214 included 95 fatalities in the two most serious airline crashes in this country and 43 victims of tornadoes in Arkansas and Oklahoma.

The Federal Diary

By Jerry Kluttz

Longer Work Week Idea Proves No Idle Rumor

Kluttz

LONGER HOURS? This is something else for Federal employes to worry about. For several months there have been whispers that certain Congressmen were opposed to the five-day, 40-hour work week in Government and that an attempt may be made to lengthen it. The reports, however, were quickly belittled.

Now, however, the first concrete action along those lines has come to light. The incident took place during secret hearings of the House Appropriations Committee on the War Department budget. The witness was Heath Onthank, War's civilian personnel director. The published hearings reveal that Representative Case (R., S. Dak.) asked him this question:

"What would be the effect if Congress should pass a law requiring 44 hours a week at the present rates of pay?"

Onthank conceded that the department would be able to reduce its number of employes. But in the questioning that followed, the War official said he doubted if a 10 per cent increase in hours would result in a 10 per cent reduction of employes. Later on, Representative Engel (R., Mich.) told Onthank:

"You should be able to take off the same percentage of personnel if you go back on the 44-hour week as you put on when you adopted the 40-hour week."

Onthank told the committee that he'd look into the matter and report back to the committee. The published record, however, doesn't give the results of his investigation—if one was made.

Anyway, War's emloyes who have read the record have a sneaking suspicion that the committee had longer working hours for them in mind when it recommended the nearly 75,000 slash in civilian personnel.

But whether it did or not, Federal workers can get comfort and reassurance out of this fact—that the Administration will oppose any general move to lengthen the work week. And it's a safe bet that the President would veto any bill or legislation that would provide it.

MILITARY FOR CIVILIANS: Despite disclaimers that military people aren't replacing civilians in the War Department, the record shows that they are—and to a considerable extent. Also it shows this practice will be stepped up if additional civilians are fired. Representative Mahon (D., Tex.) asked Onthank about this "tendency" and he got this answer:

"In the general Army hospitals it became necessary to replace 9000 or 10,000 civilians with troops because the personnel ceilings were so low that about 10,000 civilians had to be discharged. The Surgeon General said, 'I have patients in bed. They must be fed. They must be cared for. If I fire 10,000 civilians I will have to use troops to do the duties.'

"Another example is in the Air Forces, where they have had to use soldiers for guards and firefighters instead of civilians. As Air Forces points out, if you have a fire-fighter crew for planes which crash, and you have to fire the civilians making up those crews, you just cannot let the planes burn. You must have fire-fighters, and, therefore, they have to use troops if they do not have the civilians."

Onthank hinted that if 50,000 civilians must be fired, then it's altogether possible that a similar number of soldiers would be brought in to do the work. He didn't say so, but the net cost of a soldier in a civilian job is far greater than that of a civilian.

PAYDAYS: A study soon will get underway which may result in a shorter payday lag for Federal workers. The lag between the time a Federal worker earns his money and the time he's paid ranges up to 10 days. The delay is a great inconvenience to new employes, and agency after agency has demanded the delay be reduced.

A joint committee has been set up to study the entire matter of Federal disbursements. On it are Treasury, General Accounting and Budget Bureau officials. It's entirely possible that the group will recommend abolition of Treasury's central disbursing office, and that each agency set up its own unit to pay its bills. It's estimated that the payday lag could be reduced an average of four days if this were done. However, the agency system might prove to be more costly. That's the reason for the inquiry.

FEDERAL TRADE: A coming vacancy on this commission is likely to be filled by an employe within it. The term of William A. Ayres expires late in the summer, and he isn't expected to be a candidate for reappointment.

Speculation on his successor centers on James A. Horton, chief of FTC's Office of Legal Investigations, and Richard P. Whiteley, the chief trial counsel. Horton has been indorsed by both Democratic and Republican bigwigs. However, it's a good bet that Lowell B. Mason, the President's man on the FTC, will pick the new commissioner.

City News in Brief

Police Doubt Theft; 'Victim' Drops Case

When police expressed doubt that he was robbed of $10,845 here Friday morning, John W. Barnes, 33, Norfolk, Va., auto dealer told them to "drop the case."

Barnes had reported loss of the money and said it represented some $4000 he had gained in sale of a Cadillac auto in Pittsburgh and $4500 he had won in a crap game.

Police closed the case yesterday, Capt. Robert Bryant said, because Barnes had asked it "for reasons known only to myself."

Bryant said he had given them conflicting versions of the robbery and that police found no evidence of the Pittsburgh auto sale.

New Jail—Same Car

A man who served seven months in Virginia for drunken driving yesterday was sentenced to $100 or 30 days for taking the car in which he was arrested on the driving count.

He was William P. Tilley, 35, of 1028 Bladensburg rd. ne.

Tilley took an auto owned by A. M. Harrington, Indianapolis, Ind., last November 2; was arrested for drunk driving. His sentence today was for taking property without right.

The men, Regilee Johnson, 31, of 509 Q st. nw., and Ardrick M. Hinton, 34, of 1400 6th st. nw., were arrested Saturday as they staggered under the load of two sections of canvas, 25 by 30 feet and 20 by 20 feet, respectively.

According to police the money was stolen from a tin box concealed in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Dennis J. Cunningham, sr., 731 Abner's Court, se., May 20.

The annual outing of the District of Columbia Bar Association was held yesterday at the Congressional Country Club.

Association Picks PUC Delegate

Douglas B. Jenkins, president of the Bennings Citizens' Association, was appointed the association's representative to the Public Utilities Commission hearing on the plan for using buses instead of street cars on the Benning rd ne. line.

Capital Transit Co.'s proposal to put buses along H st. has met with mixed reaction from groups in the area, with businessmen generally opposed. The Benning Association favors the substitution of buses for trolleys on the street.

A resolution was passed in favor of making a traffice survey on the corner of Benning rd. and Minnesota ave. ne.

The association donated $10 to support plans for the Field Day program to be held the last day of school at the Benning School Playground, Minnesota ave. and Foote st. ne.

Southwest

A proposal to relocate the District dog pound because of its proximity to the Randall Junior High School was made last night by Mitchell Troiano, jr., before the Southwest Citizens' Association.

Troiano also voiced the need for a Negro swimming pool in the area and for an annex to the junior high school building.

The association passed a motion urging an increase on license fees for sports arenas and heard Lieut. William Kell Murphy of the Metropolitan Police ask for "improved homes and improved society" to help combat juvenile delinquency.

U. S. Seeks Extra Refund From Pepco

Government Claim Would Increase Average Rebate From $3.60 to $4.20

If the Federal Government has its way the average Washington family will get a $4.20 rebate on its electric bill next September instead of the $3.60 ordered by the Public Utilities Commission last week.

In a statement filed yesterday with the PUC, the Treasury Department, acting for the Federal Government as the Potomac Electric Power Co.'s largest consumer, asked PUC to order an additional $580,103 refund to all Pepco customers.

This sum would be in addition to the $3,213,601 which the PUC last week ordered Pepco to repay. The three million dollars, representing surplus over the three-year period 1944-1946, is to be refunded by Pepco in credits against September electric bills.

A Pepco official estimated yesterday than the additional half-million dollars would average 60 cents for the residential customer.

The Government statement, which was filed by Byron E. Harding, said that the $580,103 was in excess of the 5½ per cent earnings allowed Pepco and was above refunds included in the three-million-dollar figure.

The Harding statement said that PUC Accountant V. A. McElfresh had erred when at a hearing last Tuesday he said this sum was $490,482.

The McElfresh estimate included a tax reduction of $186,383 while actually the sum is $276,004, the Harding statement said.

McElfresh was criticized by Harding for recommending that the excess be placed in a special reserve fund and used to prevent future rate increases.

Harding said that a reserve fund would be "a definite departure" from the sliding scale arrangement under which Pepco operates and "is neither necessary nor desirable."

If Pepco is permitted to set up the reserve, Harding recommended that it be put under the control of the PUC and be used "for the sole benefit of customers

Christian Group Plans Fund Drive In Jewish Appeal

The Christian Committee of the United Jewish Appeal made plans for a fund-raising drive during the week of June 22, at an organization meeting held at the Hotel Statler yesterday.

The committee's aim is to raise $200,000 as the District's contribution to the Nation-wide drive to aid the million and a half Jews remaining in Europe.

The campaign of the Christian Committee will include a dinner on June 24, it was announced.

Present at yesterday's meeting were Frank R. Jelleff and Carter T. Barron, cochairmen, and the following committee members: Arthur Gaeth, Frank Addison, Floyd Akers, Earl Baker, Milton Barlow (for Willard Marriott), Wilmer J. Waller, Robert V. Fleming, Dr. William Earl Clark, Paul Shorb, Frank LaFalce (for John J. Payette), Philip L. Graham, Alfred Chester Flather, Raymond Garrity, William Leahy, Granville Gude and Brock Whitlock.

Alcatraz 'Graduate,' Accused Of Intent to Kill, Free on Bond

John Kendrick, the Alcatraz "graduate," who, police said, tried to "rub out" Tommy English Sunday night, was freed last night in bond of $2700.

English

Kendrick posted $2500 bond to answer charges of assault with intent to kill and possession of a deadly weapon and $200 on two traffic charges. He will be arraigned today in Municipal Court.

Police still haven't learned whether the attempted killing was prompted by a quarrel over a woman or the result of a gangland feud.

English, whose police record rivals that of Kendrick, told police Kendrick was out to get him because of a woman.

"I was out to get him—that's all," he grunted tersely to Pvt. A. P Scheral at the First Precinct station.

Kendrick was one of the leaders of the notorious "Tri-State Gang," which operated in the District and nearby States in the early thirties. English is a former member of the equally notorious "Blackface Gang."

Kendrick, 40, was waiting in his car at 11 p. m. Sunday near English's home at 832 10th st. nw. according to police. When the 34-year-old English walked out of his house, Kendrick fired one shot from a Luger. The shot missed English and shattered the window of a beauty salon at 830 10th st. nw.

Police said Kendrick's gun apparently jammed after the first shot. Kendrick raced away in his car. He sideswiped a truck at 11th and M sts. nw., and abandoned his car at 13th and M sts. nw. He was picked up by a police scout car at 14th and Swann sts. nw., a short while later.

Kendrick in the past has shown himself a free hand with a gun.

JOHN KENDRICK

In 1932 he shot a Washington policeman, Pvt. Thomas Bacon, and for that assault did a 10-year stretch at Alcatraz.

He was picked up for questioning by police last September in connection with the George Clainos white slave case.

English was a youth in his early 20s when he joined the "Blackface Gang." English went to jail and the gang was broken up in 1935 when the gang leader, Morris Beck, was shot and killed by Detective Earl Baker during a holdup.

English was arrested three times in 1946 and currently is free in bond on all of the charges. In the District, he was arrested on a narcotics and safecracking charge. He is also charged with housebreaking in Montgomery County.

Thieves Get Pony, Razors, 26 Cases Rum

A brown and white pony complete with harness and cart, 26 cases of rum, 11 straight razors and a camera.

The theft of the pony, its harness and cart was reported to police by Bill C. Rode, a mechanic, of 621 Main ave. sw., who estimated the value at $750.

Rode bought the pony originally for his four children, whose ages range from 1 to 5, and kept it in a stable in the rear of 479 K st. sw.

Alvin Morgenstein, owner of Al's Chicken House, 629 4th st. sw., told police his restaurant was entered by thieves early yesterday. They got away with $274 in cash and 26 cases of rum valued at $910.

The 11 straight razors, along with $20 in cash, vanished from the Grafton Hotel barbershop at 1139 Connecticut ave. nw. during the weekend, according to James Keller, proprietor of the shop.

The theft of a Heiland flashgun camera, valued at $250, from the Goldcraft Studios, 716 13th st. nw. was reported by Bernard Bishop, coowner of the studios.

Man Accused Of Shooting Mother, Sister

A 22-year-old trash collector went on a shooting rampage at about 11 p. m. last night in his home at 1320 Corcoran st. nw., and critically wounded his mother, killed his girl friend and wounded his sister.

Critically wounded were the mother, Mrs. Bessie Gaston, 44, who was shot in the chest and abdomen. The girl friend, Alberta Boyd, 22, of 3101 Garfield st. nw., died shortly after 1 a. m.

All of the wounded were taken to Freedmen's Hospital.

Police identified the gun wielder as Floyd Gilliam and said he is employed at the Washington Tourist Camp.

Police did not learn immediately what had precipitated the wholesale family shooting. They said Gilliam first shot his mother in her first floor quarters at the Corcoran st. address, then raced to his room on the second floor where he shot his girl friend. He then went to the third floor where his sister lives and attacked her, police said.

Increased School Fund, Water Rate Suggested

$8,000,000 More Needed to Eliminate Part-Time Classes, Rep. Horan Says

By Edward F. Ryan
Post Reporter

Capitol subcommittees, driving separately to balance the District's 1948 budget, worked yesterday on these plans to make the city's financial ends meet:

1. A proposal to boost water rates, instead of letting the District borrow Federal money, to finance the city's recommended 50-million-dollar water construction program.

2. A suggestion for writing a 10-million-dollar school construction program, instead of a two-million-dollar one, into next year's budget.

Sales Tax Proposed

A sales tax was advanced as a means of meeting new revenue demands.

Representative George J. Bates (R., Mass.) said he had asked District officials to study the water rate increase. He said it was aimed at a "pay-as-you-go" expansion of the city's water supply system.

Bates is chairman of the House District Fiscal Affairs Subcommittee, in charge of city revenue legislation, including the Commissioners' water-financing plan. The Commissioners asked Congress to make the Federal and District governments pay for the water now supplied free, and to authorize long-term Federal loans to help finance the construction program.

Bates said a pay-as-you-go financing plan would save some 10 million dollars which the proposed loans would cost in interest.

8 Million More Asked

The school construction proposals were discussed in executive session by the House District Appropriations Subcommittee, meeting with school officials.

Subcommittee Chairman Walt Horan (R., Wash.) said eight million dollars more would be needed in next year's budget to start a building program that would eliminate part-time classes in Washington schools within five years.

He said the question of school building was held open until a revenue program is prepared by the fiscal subcommittee, and until further discussion of school proposals to pay for new buildings by borrowing.

PUC Funds Discussed

Horan said the school building needs spelled a sales tax for the District. The Commissioners have recommended a 2 per cent sales tax, to raise nine million dollars the first year of its full operation, but Bates has been cool to the plan.

Horan's group also discussed holding up funds for the office of People's Counsel in the Public Utilities Commission. Horan emphasized the discussion was not a criticism of People's Counsel John O'Dea.

Horan said there had been no decision to knock out the $12,000 fund for the office. He said the present PUC appears to protect the people's interest, and that the People's Counsel setup gives "an opportunity, and I think a valid one, to make a saving."

Sen. Vandenberg Is Honored With Degree by American U.

Senator Arthur H. Vandenberg (R., Mich.), President Pro Tempore of the Senate, received an honorary doctor of laws degree last night at American University's thirty-ninth annual commencement.

University President Paul F. Douglass, conferring the degree, cited Vandenberg for helping maintain in this country "a united front in a constructive foreign policy."

Robert V. Fletcher, chairman of American University's board of trustees, also received an honorary doctor of laws degree as President Douglass handed out bachelor and masters degrees to 121 students.

The principal commencement speaker was Bishop G. Bromley Oxnam of New York, Methodist churchman and one-time president of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America.

At Trinity College commencement exercises at 11 a. m. yesterday, bachelor of arts degrees went to 95 young women. The ceremony commemorated the fiftieth anniversary of granting of the college charter.

"Graduates of the Class of 1947 cannot be casual observers of the stream of life," Dr. Robert Mahoney, Catholic layman and director of Hartford, Conn., secular education, told the Trinity graduates.

He urged them to recognize the needs of the hour and to exert an influence worthy of their Alma Mater. He also urged "constant scrutiny of an interested citizenry" in American policies, both domestic and foreign.

At Chevy Chase Junior College exercises held at 10 a. m. at Chevy Chase Methodist Church, 42 were graduated from the junior college department and seven from the high school department. The high school department is being discontinued after this year.

Dr. Theodore H. Wilson, president of University of Baltimore, urged the graduates to use their education for the betterment of the world.

At St. Patrick's Academy, 924 G st. nw., 46 were graduated at evening exercises presided over by the Most Rev. Lawrence J. Shehan, auxiliary bishop of Baltimore, who also delivered the main address. Msgr. John J. Russell, pastor of St. Patrick's Church, assisted.

At Madiera School at Greenway, Fairfax County, Va., nearly 600 guests were present as 67 seniors received diplomas in a ceremony at 5:30 p. m. Mrs. David L. Wing, headmistress at the school, delivered the principal commencement address.

National Cathedral School will hold its graduation ceremony at 10:30 a. m. today in Washington Cathedral.

Fifty-three girls, including 22 from the Washington area, will receive diplomas. The Right Rev. Angus Dun, Episcopal Bishop of Washington, will deliver the main commencement address.

Three students, two of them graduating, will hold special honor in the procession for outstanding school service. They are Miss Mary Wilson, daughter of Senator and Mrs. George Wilson (R., Iowa); Miss Polly Stott, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Charles A. Stott, jr., 2930 Ellicott st. nw.; and Miss Patty Frohman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip Frohman, 3514 Macomb st. nw.

Cat-Fancying Capt. Edie 'Had Mind of His Own,' Court Told

Capt. John Rufus Edie, wealthy cat fancier who left the bulk of his $375,000 estate to St. John's Episcopal Church, had "a mind of his own."

This belief was expressed yesterday to a District Court jury by Miss Julia Schwarz, 114 S. Fayette st., Alexandria, who has been named a $5000 beneficiary in the will. Miss Schwarz's aunt, Mrs. Bertha Schwarz, who served as Captain Edie's housekeeper, was bequeathed $20,000 and Edie's 14 pedigreed cats under terms of the will.

Miss Julia Schwarz, the $5000 beneficiary, is a practical nurse who served Mrs. Edie prior to her death in 1945 and later attended Edie until his death in September of last year. She told the jury that Captain Edie "was not very easily influenced."

She declared he led a simple life, highlighted daily by symphonic record playing before breakfast and a short afternoon stroll.

Captain Edie's will, which left $290,000 to the church in addition to his other bequests, is being contested by a niece and two nephews.

Another witness at yesterday's hearing, Dr. Walter Freeman, Washington neuropathologist, testified that, in his opinion, Edie was of sound mind when the will was drawn in 1945.

Mrs. Guthrie Beckley, 2000 F st. nw., told the court she had known Edie since 1919, and that she had never observed anything irrational in his actions.

An attorney, John L. Hamilton, a cousin of one of the executors of the Edie estate, testified that he witnessed the drawing up of Edie's will in March, 1946, and that the Captain was "unquestionably" of sound mind at that time.

Hough Trial Set for June 23 In Alexandria

Trial of Stanley P. Hough, Arlington builder indicted for fraud in connection with a veterans' housing project at Oxon Hill, Md., was set for June 23 in the United States Court at Alexandria yesterday.

Hough's arraignment, scheduled for yesterday, was postponed because he was not accompanied by an attorney. He said he was under the impression his lawyer's presence would not be required for the arraignment, and promised he would be represented by counsel on the day of the hearing.

A bond of $2500, posted by the defendant in the Alexandria court last February, was continued until the date of the trial.

Hough, who also is under indictment on a fraud charge in Prince Georges County, Md., said he intended to plead innocent to the indictment and expressed confidence that he would be cleared of all charges. He said some "new developments within the next few days might completely alter the picture."

Hough is accused of accepting deposits from 28 veterans toward new homes in the Oxon Hill development which have never been completed. At the time of his arrest, foundations for 12 of the houses had been laid.

2 D. C. Phone Unions Ready To Join CWA

The two Washington telephone workers' unions plan to join the soon-to-be organized Communications Workers of America (Ind.).

This was announced yesterday by Helery Robinson, president of the District Federation of Telephone Workers, covering some 3000 plant, commercial and accounting employes, and Mrs. Mildred Beahm, acting president, of the Washington Telephone Traffic Union, embracing another 3000 operators.

Both union leaders made plain that affiliation with the CIO, which has formed a Telephone Workers Organizing Committee to maintain headquarters in Washington, is not in the picture at all."

At a weekend meeting in Philadelphia representatives of other telephone unions, including the key long lines' unit, conferred with CIO officials with a view to affiliation.

Mrs. Beahm, the local operators' chief, said her union already has been granted a temporary charter in the CWA and has applied for permanent membership. Both local unions, it was said, authorized affiliation with the CWA in referendum votes last fall.

Representing the Washington phone unions at the CWA organizing convention, opening in Miami next Monday, will be Mrs. Beahm, for the operators; Robinson and Glen Watts, education director of the WFTW, for the maintenance and commercial workers.

The CWA will replace the National Federation of Telephone Workers (Ind.), which staged the recent Nation-wide telephone strike.

Miss Margaret Loughborough, Landscape Painter, Dies at 74

Miss Margaret McClelland Loughborough, 74, artist and descendant of old Washington and Virginia families, died yesterday at her home, 2700 Q st. nw.

Miss Loughborough

A painter and an active member of several Catholic organizations, Miss Loughborough previously lived at the pre-Revolutionary family estate, Milton, a one-time Indian trading post which had been in her family 120 years. The estate once occupied a large tract of land between River rd. and Massachusetts ave. just over the District line in Montgomery County.

A graduate of the Corcoran Art School, she studied in Europe and exhibited at Paris salons as well as at the Corcoran and other galleries. Her favorite art subjects were landscapes and canal and river scenes.

Miss Loughborough was a member of the Society of Washington Artists, the DAR, and the Holy Trinity parish groups of the Ladies of Charity, the Apostleship of Prayer and the Sodality of the Blessed Virgin.

Her great-grandfather was Nathan Loughborough, a comptroller of the United States Treasury, who in 1802 purchased "Milton," which was also known as "Grasslands." Her father, James Henry Loughborough, a Confederate officer, was wounded at the Battle of Fredericksburg and met his wife-to-be, a war nurse, while convalescing in Richmand.

Miss Loughborough's mother, the former Miss Margaret Cabell Brown, married Loughborough in 1862. She came to live at "Milton" in 1866 only after being assured by Gen. Robert E. Lee that it was proper for her to take the oath of allegiance to the United States. She died in 1939.

The body is at the Joseph F. Birch Sons funeral home, 3034 M st. nw. A requiem mass will be sung at 10 a. m. tomorrow at the Holy Trinity Church, 36th and O sts. nw. Burial will be in Oak Hill Cemetery.

6000 Notices Sent to Tardy Taxpayers

Six thousand District residents who failed to pay their 1946-47 personal property tax will be hearing from the tax collector this week.

Tax delinquency notices were mailed out yesterday by George H. Kidwell, deputy collector of taxes, and Samuel J. Kidd, chief of delinquent tax collection.

The notices will be followed by 4000 more before June 20, Kidd said. The tax office, handling the largest volume of the blue paper notices in its history, wasn't able to get all 10,000 of the statements in yesterday's mail.

The large number of delinquents is due to the drive by the District to catch up with residents who have been escaping the tax, Kidd said.

Twenty-nine thousand residents voluntarily filed personal property tax returns, and an additional 11,500 were assessed. The 10,000 who haven't paid were billed by the tax office last September. Bills were payable in September and March.

Notices mailed yesterday order the bills paid in 10 days. The next step of the tax office is to seize property and bank accounts.

Through blue slips and seizure Kidwell and Kidd last year collected $663,000 for the District. This year they expect to do considerably better.

In recognition of their brilliant participation in the victory of the United Nations, 14 officers of the United States armed forces were decorated yesterday by Juan Jose Arevalo, President of the Republic of Guatemala and Commander in Chief of the Army. The medals were presented by the Military Attache of the Embassy, Col. Oscar Morales Lopez, at a reception held in the Chinese Room of the Mayflower Hotel between the hours of 6 and 8.

Of the 14 thus honored, seven were on hand to receive their medals in person—General of the Army Henry H. Arnold, Gen. Carl Spaatz, Gen. George Kenney, Vice Admiral A. W. Radford, Lieut. Gen. Matthew R. Ridgway, Brig. Gen. Kenner Heartford and Lieut. Col. Gustave Pabst, jr.

Those honored in absentia included General of the Army Douglas MacArthur, Lieut. Gen. Ira Eaker, Maj. Gen. Robert L. Walsh, Maj. Gen. Ralph H. Wooten, Lieut. Col. John F. Hardie, Lieut. Col. Douglas W. Eiseman and Lieut. Col. Carlos F. Malick.

Witnessing the ceremony were members of Capital society, United States Army and Navy officers, military and naval attaches from the various embassies and members of the State Department.

The Military Attache and Senora de Morales Lopez received with Col. Salvador Bercian, Assistant Military Attache, and pretty Senora Miriam Granados, daughter of the Ambassador. Senora Granados wore a becoming rose lame cocktail dress, said her father would fly from New York to Palestine on June 9, as a member of the UN investigating committee.

Martins There

Looking very chic, Mme. Martins arrived with the Ambassador of Brazil, who immediately buttonholed General Arnold in a semi-serious conversation. Mme. Martins leave for Southampton July 1. Her costume yesterday was brown linen. With it she wore a lime green felt hat with white pique band, which went well with her chestnut hair and brown eyes.

Col. and Mrs. Joseph Mauldin were also there, said they were leaving June 13 for California, where the colonel will be on active duty with the Marines.

Arriving just in time for the decorations ceremony were the Ambassador of the Argentine and Senora de Ivanissevich. The Senora's hat of black straw rose high on one side, setting off her patrician profile to advantage.

The Minister of Peru, Humberto Fernandez-Davila, was there with his pretty daughter, Senorita Zulita Fernandez-Dacila. Her dress was pink with blue cornflowers. Admiral and Mrs. Carey Jones chatted with Mr. and Mrs. Robert Newbegin, said they were leaving soon for a visit to Ottawa, Canada.

In the ballroom adjoining the Chinese Room a delicious buffet supper was served at small tables. There were turkeys and hams, some highly seasoned Guatemalan dishes, salads, a blue and white cake and ice cream with crushed strawberries.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Humanity Limps Along, Coming to Grief, Seeking Advice, Because Parents of Young Children Fail to Rear Them Intelligently

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: Let's hope your correspondent "A. P." gets the rousing response she deserves for her contribution to your column of May 12. It reaches right down to roots.

After remarking that people seem possessed with the idea that proper behavior means conforming to hidebound rules instead of being decent individuals — i. e., properly understanding and considerate of each person in his own right—she goes on to say:

"Too often we deal with offspring as subjects to be disciplined, suppressed and set aside until they have matured, when in truth they are individuals in miniature, potential adults to be treated with as much courtesy, respect and affection as we show our friends and want for ourselves . . ."

If all of us who are now parents of young children could grapple successfully with our problems, bringing an enlightened approach to each day's complexities, so that we could distinguish between enduring value sand trivia, our children when they become adults would never need to be writing to you, or filling the psychiatrists' offices or sanitariums.

Learning Is One Phase of Growth

YEARS AGO a reputedly radical college — since on the rocks—offered an intensive short course called "Human Growth and Development." The course started with the biology of reproduction, went on through a brief study of embryology and thence to a consideration of growth as manifested in what we think of as learning.

If only such a fascinating course were required in high schools and colleges today!—for it seems to provide the basis of an informed approach to successful living. In a short space, one's views can only sound didactic. But I shall risk it in this case, in the hope that my experience—and what I consider to be my understanding — may prove of interest to others.

No two finger prints in the world are alike. Our growth patterns—enormously important to our temperament and character—differ tremendously. This shows up particularly in the young and must be respected and understood. Children have all the feelings and needs of adults, only in different proportions and shadings—a truth which elders traditionally ignore, and which the young have difficulty communicating. Often they are only indirectly expressed.

It is our job as parents to be interpreter and guide in aiding their growth. It isn't our function to try to use force to push them into a pace or pattern decreed by us. Children learn to walk and talk without our doing more than provide the example; and shouldn't these remarkable feats in babies evoke our deepest respect?

Child Is Keener Than His Elders

WHY THEN try to interfere with or push their growth in other ways? By such intrusion on their personality we only hamper their initiative and subtract from the pleasure of growth. Children will grow beautifully with a minimum of fuss from us, if we provide them with our love and a coherent family relationship to back them up. The things we don't do are quite as important as the things we do.

Granted we are bigger and stronger than they, it doesn't follow that we are better persons or even wiser in every way. We've had years more experience, we say; but what we call experience is often a matter of repeating a poor procedure for 20 years, without pausing to question it.

A child's aptness for learning far exceeds ours. If dumped in a strange land, could we learn to speak the language without a trace of accent in a couple of years? Of course we couldn't; but our 5-year-olds probably could. They are equally assimilative—for better or worse—in other ways; hence their fate depends on the conditions of growth we offer them.

If something is wrong in our family, let's acknowledge the problem without being ashamed and seek specialist help of any kind that will increase our understanding and teach us how to overcome the difficulty, minor or major. The earlier this attitude is taken, the easier the remedy—that's been the experience in our family. F. M.

Lively Interest In the Subject

DEAR F. M.: Your earnest indorsement of "A. P.'s" thoughtful contribution is in line with audience reaction expressed so far. We've had a heavy mail on the subject, all favorable with one lone exception,—in which case a lady whimsically refuses to concede "A. P.'s" theory that men and women are potentially coequal human beings. She still sticks by the Adam story, and thinks feminine finesse will always be useful in taming the allegedly superior male. M. H.

Feted at Barbecue

MR. AND MRS. ROY ST. LEWIS gave a barbecue party Sunday afternoon, complete with red and white checked tablecloths, at their country place, "Rancho Mio." Miss Stoddard, current star of "Dream Girl at Olney Sumner Theater, was guest of honor.

Among guests were the Ambassador of Panama and Senora de Vallarino, Mrs. Randolph Huntington Minor, Col. and Mrs. Brook Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Ansberry, Mr. and Mrs. Ridgeway Macy, Senator and Mrs. George W. Malone, Mrs. Edward Curtis Gann, Dr. and Mrs. George Trible, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Hayes, Mrs. J. Marcus George, Lady Iris Mountbatten and Robert Stroock.

LIKE a checkered pixie in her gaily-colored pedal-pusher outfit is Actress Haila Stoddard, currently appearing as guest star in the Olney Theater Co.'s production of "Dream Girl."

Comfortable, decorative play clothes, such as she models here, will play a major role in Haila's summer wardrobe. For, like many of her tribe, she will spend part of the torrid season playing summer stock in and out of the country theaters. Haila plans to get lots of hayseed in her hair during her "busman's holiday" and soak up enough sunshine to last her through another Broadway season next winter.

Here she wears one of Claire McCardell's incomparable play costumes, consisting of tailored shirt and thigh-length trousers. The soft chambray fabric is predominately rose in color, with green and blue figuring in the stripes and plaids. Haila tops her jaunty ensemble with a fiesta-inspired straw sombrero.

Stretch for a Trim Waistline in a Swim Suit

By Ida Jean Kain

Without any gloomy preamble about how you'll look in a swim suit, here are a few tests . . . just try them on for size. Do you lean against your own backbone, or slump against your girdle? Do you feel firm and fit through the middle or hopelessly flabby without support? Has your waistline slipped its moorings, or does it hug your figure?

Well, no use in getting down in the dumps, even if the answers add up to the middle age spread. Here's a little trick to put live tone back into that good girdle nature gave you. Make a habit of stretching so slim through the midsection that your store girdle feels very loose! Do this several times each hour of the day and very soon you won't need stays. It really works.

Every time you pull up and in with these important midsection muscles this helps to tone and strengthen those muscles. The tendency may be to lift your shoulders . . . get the knack of relaxing the shoulders as you pull up, and this concentrates the stretch where it is needed, and brings an elegant up-lift feeling.

Make a game of trying to remember to pull up snugly while preparing vegetables, or while sifting typing, and as you walk along, or drive a car, or sit in the movies . . . and especially while sitting at the dining table. Of course overeating plays its part in the belt-buckle bulge, and sitting straight and leaning against your backbone helps you to get up from the table before you get that tight feeling about the waistband. Try it!

Wool Suits Go Glamorous

Wool bathing suits have taken on a new importance because important designers have taken on wool.

Ballerina, that talented and delightful designer, whips up those knitted suits that girls who can really swim like better than any other type.

Clare Potter and Claire McCardell, wizards of the jersey suit, were making their smart dressmaker type suits when other designers were involved with pantie-waist types faturing frills, ruffles and bows. Now a score or more well-known stylists are sponsoring wool swim suits. Among them are Cole of Hollywood, Pat Prima and Gantner of San Francisco.

Tina Leser, latest arrival in the field of beachwear, has an exotic tendency that always keeps within bounds but gives glamour to her wool designs.

Your Questions On Homemaking

In the case of an acquaintance who was married before, are gifts obligatory upon receipt of an announcement of her second marriage? The last time I used my waffle iron the waffles stuck to the grids. What is the best way to remove the burnt pieces and recondition the iron?

N. B.

A wedding announcement requires neither reply nor presents.

The burnt pieces which are stuck to a waffle iron can usually be removed with a stiff brush. After all pieces are removed, and while the iron is still cold, apply fat to all cooking surfaces of the iron. A pastry brush kept for just this purpose is ideal. Now, connect the iron and heat to baking temperature. Disconnect the iron and allow to cool.

Sticking waffles in the future may be avoided by lightly greasing the grids with unsalted fat before baking the first waffle and being sure the iron is at baking temperature before putting in the batter.

I would appreciate directions for cleaning a very old and very dirty gilt frame. P. D. O.

Gilt frames need gentle treatment. Moisten a piece of cheesecloth with a solution made of equal parts of ammonia and denatured alcohol. Apply it to a small area of the frame as lightly as possible. Use a dry pad to take up the oil, then proceed to the next area. Once or twice a year pat a little lemon oil gently on the gilt to keep it from drying and cracking. Never rub. When dusting a gilt picture frame, use a very soft-bristled brush.

UNESCO Called Best Peace Hope

By Genevieve Reynolds

World War II could have been averted if women in other countries had participated in politics and public affairs to the extent of those in the United States. So declared Senator J. Harold McGrath, guest speaker at the D. C. Federation of Women's Clubs' annual breakfast yesterday at the Mayflower Hotel.

Terming UNESCO "the spearhead of all other agencies for peace," he told the some 500 women present that their greatest opportunities to work for world peace is through that organization.

Referring to the "gentler sex," the Rhode Island Senator said, "You have become the right arm of government. Your vision and moral suasion is the greatest hope of world peace and security.

"When the pros and cons of conflicting ideologies are weighed," he continued, "the men of the world will continue to fight unless the women of the world use their moral persuasion to influence them differently."

Following the Senator's speech, Mrs. William Dick Sporborg, chairman of the General Federation of Women's Clubs' International Relations Department, outlined the aims of the UNESCO to promote understanding among all the peoples of the world, and called upon members of her sex not to grow cynical over the accomplishments of U. N.

"Regardless of country or race, the man in the street wants two things," she explained. "That is job security and the right of respect as a human being." "Peace and bread are indissoluble," she said.

The war-weary peoples of the world, Mrs. Sporborg added, are watching closely the ideological conflict between Russian totalitarianism and United States democracy and free enterprise, to see which offers more job security and respect for the individual.

"There is much frustration because U. N. hasn't worked as quickly as people expected," asserted Mrs. Sporborg. "It took five years to finish the war. So people ought to give the U. N. at least five years to start working."

Mrs. Truman, guest of honor at the breakfast, made her first public appearance since returning to Washington from Missouri where she was called because of the illness of the President's mother. She wore a chic, becoming white straw hat with a navy blue crepe dress.

Mrs. Fred Vinson, wife of the Chief Justice, was the ranking member of a group of distinguished special guests, among whom were Mrs. John L. McMillan, wife of the South Carolina Representative; Mrs. Overton Brooks, wife of the Louisiana Representative; Mrs. Gordon Young, wife of the District Commissioner.

Mrs. Arnold Installed

Mrs. Joseph L. Arnold was installed president of the Women's Auxiliary of the D. C. Metropolitan Police Boys Club for her third successive term at a luncheon yesterday in the Mayflower Hotel.

Others taking the oath of office included Mrs. Evan Sholl, first vice president; Mrs. Harvey Miller, second vice president; Mrs. Hugh House, treasurer; Mrs. Raymond Harper, recording secretary, and Mrs. Charles Baseches, corresponding secretary.

The auxiliary passed a resolution to equip a room in a new building at the Camp Ernest Brown at Scotland, Md., and to name the room in honor of Mrs. Arnold.

Adas Israel Sisterhood

Mrs. Meyer Goldberg was installed president of Adas Israel Sisterhood at its membership luncheon yesterday in the Synagogue. Mrs. Joseph Wilner presided at the ceremonies.

Others installed include Mrs. Goldie Katz, first vice president; Mrs. Eugene Rosenblatt, second vice president; Mrs. Harry D. Friedman, third vice president; Mrs. Stanley Wiener, fourth vice president; Mrs. Abraham B. Nathanson, treasurer; Mrs. Philip Goldstein, recording secretary; Mrs. Joseph Blumenthal, financial secretary; Mrs. Stanley Korman, corresponding secretary; Mrs. Jacob C. Lish, administrative secretary; Mrs. Rachel Kossow and Mrs. I. S. Turover, trustees, and Mrs. Henry Oxenburg, parliamentarian.

Marks 28th Anniversary

U. S. S. Jacob Jones Post of the American Legion, the first all-woman's post chartered in this country, is going on its 29th year. Its anniversary was celebrated with a tea on Sunday, May 25, at Confederate Memorial Home.

The post, composed entirely of Naval Reserve women, was organized on May 22, 1919, as the "Betsy Ross Post No. 1," and has maintained the largest membership of women's posts since then.

In October, 1919, it obtained a new charter and was named the U. S. S. Jacob Jones, a United States destroyer torpedoed and sunk in the Scilley Islands during World War I.

Capitol Is Posting Odds

All This Week's Bets Are on One New Film; Tense Drama on 'Hill'

By Richard L. Coe

DROUGHT: Only one new picture this week . . . "Homestretch" at the Capitol, and you guess what it's about. . . . Maureen O'Hara and Cornel Wilde share the Technicolor with the ponies. . . "Honeymoon" put off a week at Keith's, with "The Egg and I" going into its fourth week tomorrow. . . . "Alexander's Ragtime Band" goes into the Columbia Thursday, but you could hardly call it new, despite "reissue" floss. . . . All other houses downtown stay as is. . . There is novelty in the Pix booking, though. . . . "Mlle. Fifi" opens today (with "The Southerner" as the rest of the double bill). . . . This is the Hollywood version of one of the two De Maupassant stories forming the Hippodrome's made-in-France "Angel and Sinner." . . . Simone Simon, Kurt Kreuger, John Emery and Alan Napier are the leads. . . . A sweet chance for comparison fanciers.

Laura Wells

CAPITOL HILL: The House Ways and Means Committee meets this morning to consider pros and cons of taxes on amusement admissions. . . . James F. Reilly, executive director of the League of New York Theaters, and Bligh A. Dodd, director of the Fairs and Expositions organization, will state the case for abolishing the luxury tax on entertainments. . . . New York reports that such names as Producer Brock Pemberton, Equity's Alfred Harding and Ilka Chase and the Dramatists Guild's Marc Connelly will be down, though they weren't on the committee's agenda yesterday afternoon. . . . The theater's real argument is summed up in the nutshell that the theater should not be classed as a luxury . . . that in both war and peace show business is called on to contribute to all worthwhile causes. . . . The hearing will be in the New House Office Building at 10 o'clock.

BRIEFCASE IN MINK: When she left Hollywood and headed East it was still winter, so Enterprise Studio's glamorous tub-thumper, Laura Wells, had a special briefcase designed in mink. . . . The same mink Barbara Stanwyck wears in the company's new film, "The Other Love." . . . Naturally, no woman, no matter how bright, gives up mink—even for Washington weather. . . . So the sleek, platinum-haired Laura all but stopped Washington traffic if not the humidity. . . . The film unit, headed by Charles Einfeld and David A. Loew, also has "Arch of Triumph" and "Body and Soul" ready for release. . . . Laura has small roles in all, so you'll eventually see what we mean. . . . On her trip the former Powers model has been asking people what they think of the movies. . . . And has found they can talk all day on the subject. . . . She has as many opinions as she has had interviews. . . . One point of unanimity, though, must be that Laura's easy to be with.

PENTATONIC: Spelled almost like the building, but meaning five-tone . . . So Eugene Kusmiak, "Lute Song's" musical director, describes the score composed by Raymond Scott for the National's musical . . . But he used Western harmonies for the atmospheric melodies . . . Kusmiak was bandleader of the Third Infantry Division Band in the ETO . . . Scott's fine tones, Kusmiak explains, are like the black keys on the piano.

SHARP-EYED: "Henry V" had been out of the Little for nearly a week when it happened . . . A small, freckled lad zoomed up 9th st. and stopped short in front of the signs for the current "Well-Digger's Daughter" . . . His eyes popped: "Jeepers! Whaddaya know! They gotta new pitcha!"

ELIZABETHEANS: The King William Players of St. John's College, Annapolis, ought to be authorities on the days of Good Queen Bess . . . Within the last year they've played John Webster's "Duchess of Malfi" and Ben Jonson's "Volpone" . . . Now they're back again in the sixteenth century with Johnson's "The Alchemist" . . . This is practically never played any more, and to make things easier for drama students who'd like a crack at a rare offering, seats are on sale at Talbert's in the lobby of the Willard for their two performances this week, Wednesday and Friday evenings at 8:30 in Iglehart Hall on the campus . . . Rogers Albritton of Washington and Virginia Bays of Annapolis head the cast.

PINCH-HITTER: Assistant Superintendent Sibyl Baker, of the D. C. Recreation Department, turns reporter to tell us of the Powell Recreation Center's production, "Butch," the other afternoon. . . . The curtain was set to go up, but there was no "David Graham" on tap . . . The fellow programmed for the part simply didn't show . . . "Up steps," as Miss Baker puts it, "Bill Raymond of the stage crew, who volumteers to read the part. He was in working clothes, had to borrow a coat large enough to fit him, and he came on without a single rehearsal . . . The audience seemed to forget he had the scrip in his hand all the time." . . . Bill's a student at Roosevelt and Miss Baker rightly calls him a sport for saving the day. Atta boy, Bill.

KING-SMITH: The swank stable players (off the courtyard, rear of 2118 Mass. ave.) last night offered two short plays, "The Purification," by Tennessee "Glass Menagerie" Williams, and "Goodbye to Richmond," which co-director Horton Foote wrote last year for New York's Neighborhood Playhouse. . . The bill continues through next Sunday night.

JANIS PAIGE can sit out a little longer. Taking a rest atop a Western bar in "Cheyenne," she postpones her arrival in the picture at the Earle for another week. How come? "The Two Mrs. Carrolls," with Humphrey Bogart and Barbara Stanwyck, will hold on to the 13th st. spot another week

Marshalls of Madrid Are Black Marketers

By Leonard Lyons

New York.—J. Alvarez del Vayo, the ex-Foreign Minister of Loyalist Spain, last week discussed the Franco regime and the possibility of uprooting the men who now are in power in Madrid. "Spain," said del Vayo, "is one, big black market, controlled by the generals. It's difficult to compete with a black market."

Kathleen Winsor

SHIPPING NOTE: Artie Shaw and Kathleen Winsor recently purchased a Steelcraft Cruiser, a 26-foot boat which they've named "The Nightmare of Norwalk." They drove to West Haven, Conn., to get the boat and were in a hurry to sail away with it. So great was their hurry that after they boarded the boat and sailed off, they had to put back into the dock—because they discovered that one of the shipyard's painters was still aboard.

BIRTHDAY DEPT.: Lucille Watson, the venerable star, had a birthday party the other night. One of her friends later asked her if she had had a physical check-up. "I don't need one," the star insisted. "I know my heart and lungs are in fine shape—because I blew out all the candles on my birthday cake with one blow."

LOST AND FOUND: Some years ago a Stork Club customer gave Sherman Billingsley a cigaret case inscribed with both their names. A few days ago the customer received the case from a cabdriver who reported that he had found it in his cab and recognized the names . . . The customer again presented it to Billingsley, who explained: "It must have been stolen from my apartment by someone who lost it in the cab." The donor then studied the case again and said: "It looks better now than when I first gave it to you. In fact, this looks like real gold" . . . Billingsley never told him that he had a replica made, in fear of losing the original— that he thought the original was a gold one and he therefore had the replica made in gold.

MOVIES: The most expensive commuting on the Stamford-Darien run was made this week, when Elia Kazan, the director of "Gentleman's Agreement," brought his stars and crew to Conn. Dorothy McGuire was placed on the platform, under the "Darien" sign. Gregory Peck was to be shown leaving the train and rushing to embrace her. Peck and the crew went to Stamford and took the train to Darien. But the car stopped too far back from where Miss McGuire was waiting. They went back to Stamford and took the next train —and moved up a few cars. This time the train stopped over a viaduct, and the doors didn't open at all . . . On the third trip to Stamford, the car stopped at the proper spot, and the movie scene was made.

LOCAL NEWS: Elsa Maxwell has received a visa for Spain. She's going there to attend the wedding of the Duke of Alba's daughter . . . John Gunther is writing an article for "'47," in which he will give a list of the 60 men who run America . . . The remarkable story of Sylvia F. Porter, the Financial Editor and Columnist of the New York Post, is told in the new issue of Colliers . . . Gabriel Pascal has purchased a castle in Ireland. It's near the new film studio where he and G. B. Shaw expect to establish a film industry for Ireland. The Johnston office has ordered some of the best scenes cut from "Brute Force," the new Mark Hellinger movie. They were scenes in which Sam Levene gave the finest performances of his career. The cuts were made at the insistence of the State Department, lest Americans be portrayed as too brutal.

'Brigadoon' and Nutmeg Yank Would Be Swell for Deanna!

By Hedda Hopper

Hollywood — Universal-International is trying to buy the Broadway hit, "Brigadoon," for Deanna Durbin. If Deanna gets this and "Connecticut Yankee," she'll be right back in the big league again . . . David Niven, dining at my house the other night, told me his two sons are having a wonderful time at their grandfather's home in England. They have ponies, dogs and lambs, which they feed from a bottle. David is mighty concerned about his family. He wonders if he can make a home for his children in England while he works in Hollywood. I think the boys would benefit by being brought up in both countries . . . David, undoubtedly, will make one picture a year in London. As soon as he finishes "The Bishop's Wife" for Sam Goldwyn, he'll report to Alexander Korda in England for "Bonnie Prince Charlie." I asked David if the Bonnie Prince had been one of his boyhood idols. "He certainly was," said he, "and I've got the limbs for the kilts." He has, too—the sturdiest pair of Scottish legs I've ever seen . . . Incidentally Rita Hayworth will have left England long before David arrives there . . . Tony Bartley (Delorah Kerr's husband) had to bail out of planes four times during the war, according to Niven. On one occasion, he broke his back. But you'd never guess that Tony was a war hero by talking to him. He's got modesty plus.

Deanna Durbin

Kind Words, King Cole!

Cole Porter, here looking over the daily rushes of "The Pirate," tells me that Gene Kelly and Judy Garland are doing terrific jobs in the picture. Sighed he, "The kids of today are so talented." Well, the youngsters of his day weren't so bad either . . . Remember Gale Page—one of the four daughters in that Warner Bros. series seven years ago? She retired, married pianist Salito De Falls, and had four children. Now she's picking up her career again in the movie version of "Time of Your Life," with Jimmy Cagney . . . Cathy O'Donnell and Farley Granger are being borrowed from Sam Goldwyn for costarring roles in "Your Red Wagon" at RKO. John Houseman will produce the picture, which is being adapted from the novel, "Thieves Like Us." It deals with three youngsters who got a wrong start in life. Nicholas Ray, formerly of the Broadway stage, will direct.

Bright Student Star

Vanessa Brown, who was so good in "The Late George Apley," is one of the most talented kids I've met. She's 19, but looks three years younger. Her mother is a doctor; her father, a professor at UCLA. She takes her schooling seriously. Between pictures she doesn't miss a session at UCLA; and she speaks five languages . . . Mark Stevens' French accent for "Centennial Summer," produced on "This Is Hollywood," sounded as authentic as Maurice Chevalier's. Virginia Bruce, who also was on the show, didn't look a day older than when I first met her at Metro 15 years ago. She was doing her first picture then with John Gilbert, whom she later married. Virginia tells me that her daughter is now 14 . . . Bill (Hopalong Cassidy) Boyd has his trailer parked beside Mayoress Gypsy Rose Lee's at Paradise Cove, near Malibu. He uses it only on weekends. That seems a delightful, economic way to spend the warm months.

Small Towns Are Screaming For Comedies, Say Exhibitors

By Thornton Delehanty

Pasadena, Calif.—The convention of picture theater exhibitors held in Los Angeles last week gave the studio heads a chance to find out what movie-goers in the small towns throughout the country think of the Hollywood product.

The exhibitor concensus was, according to a story in "The Hollywood Reporter," that the people are pretty much fed up with heavy dramas and psychological groaners and are screaming for comedies.

This is an ancient scream, as it has been shown statistically that comedies always have the preference at the box office over heavy drama, although this does not mean that there are not individual favorites in the latter category.

"One exhibitor, Roy Kalver," said "the Reporter" story, "operates the two theaters in Decatur, Ind. He was particularly bitter over the alleged lack of 'light' pictures. Kalver asserted that the studios have forgotten that 'the people want to laugh.' He contended that most of the B pictures have mystery or gangster themes and very few are of the comedy variety.

"One Illinois exhibitor," the story continued, 'said the house record of his theater is held by a low-budget Western with an almost unknown Western star. As an example of the diversity of tastes in communities of different sizes, an Ohio exhibitor said that a major company picture that is grossing big in larger towns could not draw a crowd in his theater even if he tried to 'drive them in with a gun.'"

The outlook doesn't hold out much hope for comedy, although there are several films in this field which bear every promise of living up to the best traditions. There is, for example. "The Bachelor and the Bobby Soxer," the Cary Grant picture scheduled for release in August.

A person of unquestioned taste and authority saw this picture recently at a sneak preview and said it is as funny as "The Awful Truth."

From another source come excellent reports on "Dear Ruth," the Norman Krasna play which has been transcribed with singular felicity and fidelity to the screen.

Committee Formed to Back 'Voice of America' Program

Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, yesterday announced a committee of educators, publishers and civic leaders has been formed to support legislation to retain the State Department's international information and cultural program.

A committee statement said it "will seek immediate congressional approval of the Mundt bill to authorize the program," and will urge Congress provide sufficient funds.

"We should be able to raise our voice in time of peace as well as in time of war," McGill commented.

The group, called the Committee for United States Information Abroad, is headed by McGill as chairman. It said the cultural affairs program is needed to "bring about a better understanding" between this and other nations.

The committee includes:

Thurman L. Barnard, vice president and general manager, Compton Advertising Agency; Edward Barrett, editorial director, Newsweek Magazine; Barry Bingham, president, Louisville Times and Courtier-Journal; Julien Bryan, executive director, International Film Foundation; Cass Canfield, publisher, Harper's Magazine; William Carr, associate secretary, National Education Association.

Dr. Arthur H. Compton, chancellor, Washington University; Louis G. Cowan, Louis G. Cowan, Inc.; Gardner Cowles, president, Des Moines Register and Tribune; Jonathan Daniels, author; John S. Dickey, president, Dartmouth College; Wilbur Forrest, assistant editor, New York Herald Tribune; Reuben Gustavson, chancellor, University of Nebraska.

Palmer Hoyt, publisher, Denver Post; Robert M. Hutchins, chancellor, University of Chicago; Francis A. Jamieson, public relations adviser; Dr. Charles Johnson, president, Fisk University; Frederick Marquardt, foreign editor, Chicago Sun; Philip Reed, board chairman, General Electric Co.; Elmo Burns Roper, jr., political analyst; Raymond Sawyer, national commander, American Veterans of World War II.

Acheson Calls For Approval Of Oil Pact

By The Associated Press

Undersecretary of State Acheson yesterday indorsed the Anglo-American petroleum agreement "without reservation or qualification" and urged Senate ratification without further delay.

In testimony to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, Acheson said the pact "does not pretend to be a device" for solving all of the world's oil problems. But he said it sets up what Britain and the United States "consider fair and relevant rules" for dealing with the situation.

The agreement was negotiated by the two governments in September, 1945, but becomes effective, so far as the United States is concerned, only when approved by a two-thirds vote of the Senate. President Truman submitted it to the last Congress, but the Senate never acted on it.

Some oil men have objected strongly to the agreement, contending it would lead to tight Government controls over production and use of oil. The agreement affirms these general principles:

1. Adequate supplies of petroleum should be accessible in international trade to all countries "on a competitive and nondiscriminatory basis."

2. The interests of producing countries should be safeguarded "with a view to their economic advancement."

The agreement provides for establishment of an international petroleum commission and eventually for development of a pact between all nations interested in international petroleum trade.

Acheson said the commission is intended "merely as a forum" for discussing petroleum problems. He contended there is no basis for concern that the agreement would result in an international cartel and increase Government regulations of the petroleum industry.

N. J.) why the pact is limited to Asked by Senator Smith (R., the United States and Britain and why the Dutch and Russia, for example, were not included, Acheson replied that the agreement contemplates bringing other nations in later.

The Undersecretary noted that America and Britain produced about 90 per cent of the world's petroleum, and added:

"If we can agree on the solution of problems which concern us, it will be much easier to get other nations to join us."

Iraq Oil Accord Reached

New York, June 2 (AP).—Standard Oil Co. (N. J.) announced today major partners of the Iraq Petroleum Co. are in accord on a basis for a new agreement, acceptable to the French participants, relating to oil operations in the Middle East.

The new pact would replace the original 1928 group agreement and eliminate circumstances under which the French partners recently started legal action to prevent Standard Oil (N. J.) and Socony-Vacuum Oil Co. from acquiring an interest in Arabian American Oil Co., now jointly owned by Standard Oil of California and the Texas Co., the announcement said.

Under such an agreement, the company added, there would be substantial expansion in production of Iraq Petroleum Co., and partners would obtain crude from the company according to their needs rather than in fixed proportions as has been the case. Restrictions against independent action by the partners in developing oil resources in a large area of the Middle East also would be eliminated.

Jersey Standard officials said the new basis has not yet been accepted by C. S. Gulbenkian, American oil man who owns 5 per cent of the Iraq company and whose approval is needed before the agreement can be concluded.

Shell to Buy From Gulf

London, June 2 (AP).—Shell Petroleum announced tonight signing of an agreement to buy Iraq petroleum from the Gulf Exploration Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa., under an arrangement which in Britain was being called a dollar saving scheme.

The Gulf Exploration Co. owns half of the Kuwait Oil Co., which is the concessionaire for exploitation of oil fields in the sheikdom of Kuwait, on the Persian Gulf in southern Iraq.

Details and duration of the agreement were not made public.

George Leigh-Jones, a managing director of Shell Petroleum, said his organization was undertaking to purchase considerable amounts of crude oil, the quantities increasing annually. The products, he said, will be disposed of in sterling areas in Europe, Africa and the Far East as well as in Great Britian, and it was expected consequently that there should be a marked reduction of imports from the United States.

Hope was expressed in British petroleum circles that, with other sources available, the Shell company will be able eventually to sell oil it holds in the Carribean area in the United States, thereby producing dollars for Britain.

Soap Prices Slashed

New York, June 2 (AP).—Kamen Soap Products Co. announced today price reductions averaging 31.6 per cent on all its soap products. Cuts range from 25 per cent on granulated soap bead to 40 per cent on a soap powder.

THE DISTRICT LINE

SENATE, SENATOR

Some years ago the South Dakota legislature passed a resolution which eventually caused a Georgia Senator's mail to go astray.

When a daughter was born to the Howes family, the South Dakota legislators honored their colleagues by formally resolving that the girl's name should be Mary Senate Howes.

As the years rolled on, the "Mary" was practically forgotten, and everybody knew the young lady as Senate Howes.

Then girl met boy—and when they got married, complications set in. The boy was Marcus George, son of Senator Walter F. George, of Georgia.

Mail addressed to Senator George is sometimes delivered to Mrs. Senate George, and vice versa.

But in spite of the confusion, Mrs. Senate George still likes her name very much. So much, in fact, that she's passed it along to her 4-year-old daughter.

Mrs. George

After Marcus was killed in action while flying for the Navy in '43, Mrs. George went back to her first vocational love—advertising.

She now edits "This Week," which the Hotel Association publishes for its guests, and writes the "Intermission Time" column in the National Theater program.

WHAT'S YOUR NAME, RAY?

Julian F. Birnbaum, 3306 Croffut pl. se., notices that two periodicals can't get together on Ray Milland's real name.

The June issue of Coronet says it's "Reginald Truscott Jones," but the May issue of Family Circle says it's "Jack Millane."

Julian is worried about this mixup, and hopes that Paramount will get it straightened out, so that we'll know who really hocked that typewriter.

STREET SCENE

H. W. S. of Potomac st. nw., says one of the most unusual sights in town is to be found in the District refuse crew which works in the vicinity of Connecticut ave. and Garfield st. nw.

Most of the gang attracts little attention, but one laddiebuck stands out like a beacon. He's well over 6 feet tall, well built, muscular and obviously a powerful man.

Sometimes he wears a yellow (football?) jersey with a huge "16" on the back, and on his head he usually has a cap completely encircled with fresh red roses.

Many a passing citizen, dressed in the conventional male uniform, has probably wished wistfully that he, too, dared to be different.

SIMILE

We recently carried a gag about how quickly horns blow when the traffic light changes. The item refuses to be forgotten.

The latest to challenge the originality of the thought is the Smithsonian Institution's Paul H. Oehser, who suggests we ought to reprint some lines which appeared in The Post on March 13, 1941:

I used to heed the stop-and-go's
With watchdog assiduity;
Yet nearly always there were those Who honked their blasted horns at me.

* * * *

But now, not so. I've grown astute!
I crane no more to glimpse the flicker;
I wait until I hear them toot
And get across a darn sight quicker.

* * * *

What though the sign says "go" or "stop,"
Though red or green may be the dye;
At corners where there is no cop
The horn is faster than the eye.

MAN BITES DOG

Tom Beesley of the Dorchester had the pleasure of giving a ticket to a policeman recently. Nothing came of it, but it was fun anyhow.

At a minor fire in Tom's neighborhood, he spotted a police car needlessly parked across the sidewalk on Mozart pl., and thought to himself, "What a swell opportunity to give a cop a ticket."

(He explains that "any citizen can arrest a policeman found in flagrant violation of the law. The Supreme Court says so.")

So he found a handy scrap of paper, wrote out a summons for illegal parking, and stuck it on the windshield wiper of the police car bearing license No. 117.

Of course the policeman tore the ticket to shreds when he found it, and as far as he's concerned the incident is closed.

But Beesley will be able to luxuriate forever in the memory that, once upon a time, he gave a ticket to a cop.

Grin and Bear It

"I guess I'm sentimental, but I hate to leave the old school —I got married and raised my kids here!"

HERE is a pleasant little game that will give you a message every day. It is a numerical puzzle designed to spell out your fortune. Count the letters in your first name. If the number of letters is 6 or more, subtract 4. If the number is less than 6, add 3. The result is your key number. Start at the upper left-hand corner of the rectangle and check every one of your key numbers, left to right. Then read the message the letters under the checked figures give you.

The Bridge Deck

By Florence Osborn

Lest you think that all strange bidding takes place in family bridge games, consider the unusual sequence of bids in today's hand, played by two Southern masters at the Vanderbilt Cup matches.

Preston Ellett, formerly of Richmond, now of New York, and Ben O. Johnson of Spartanburg, S. C., reached seven hearts in two jumps. Ellett opened tthe bidding with one spade, a psychic notion, the purpose of which he did not reveal to us. Johnson held back with his high cards, saying two clubs. But when Ellett rebid three hearts Johnson jumped all the way to seven.

The play also presented a problem, declarer having to risk winning his grand-slam contract or going down on the opening lead.

West led his fourth-best ... mond and South could see tha... had all the tricks except for two low clubs. The only way he could get rid of them was to throw them on the ace and king of diamonds so he could take the diamond finesses. He played small from the board and when his singleton jack won there was no further trouble.
